2,000 pupils flee Bates fire

ANNAPOLIS — The effectiveness of fire drill training at Bates High School was demonstrated Tuesday when the school's more than 2,000 pupils were evacuated in less than 90 seconds after smoke from an incinerator chute filled the halls of the building.

Douglas S. King, principal, said the pupils marched from their classrooms in an orderly manner and that many of them thought that they were taking part in a routine drill.

Four fire companies responded to the alarm which was sounded after fire from an incinerator chute caught a pile of window shades stacked near an enclosure used for storing trash.

Smoke from the blaze was so heavy on the second floor that many classes were conducted in the gymnasium after the fire was extinguished.

Man's death accidental

CAMBRIDGE, Md. — The body of a 72-year-old former Baltimore resident, Charles Nelson, whose body was found floating in Cambridge Creek last week-end was caused by accidental drowning.

Dr. John Mace, deputy medical examiner, handed down the ruling Tuesday.

Cambridge police, investigating the drowning, said Mr. Nelson's last address was in the 900 block Myrtle Ave.

The body was found last Saturday by two boys who rowed out to investigate an object they had seen in the creek for two days.

Police reported that members of a freighter crew, where Mr. Nelson was employed as a cook, said the man was last seen on the evening of March 27.

Officers said $109, a watch and ring were found on Mr. Nelson's fully clothed body.

Adams paid tribute in Turner Station

By ARTHUR RANDALL

Tensions have definitely lessened in Turner Station.

This was indicated here Wednesday night when 200 persons of both races and all political beliefs met in Sollers Point High School at a $5-per plate banquet in tribute to Irvin Adams, upon the 25th anniversary of the founding of the 12th District Democratic Club.

At the speakers' table sat five ministers of churches of several denominations in the area, high county and state officials from Towson, including Chief County Commissioner Michael (Mike) Birmingham; Mr. Adams, and active leaders of the 12th District Democratic Club.

The Rev. David B. Banks, pastor of Greater St. John Baptist Church, toastmaster, set the tone of the banquet when he paid tribute to Mr. Adams as "Turner Station's most outstanding citizen" and then turned to the visiting Democratic chieftains and demanded that they fulfill the political needs of the people of the area.

HIS DEMANDS, which were later echoed by most of the local speakers, were for the following things:

1. More colored policemen.
2. Paving of the streets and sidewalks.
3. Better sewage facilities.
4. Better lighting of the area.
5. An auditorium for Sollers Point High School.
6. A swimming pool in the area.
7. Qualified colored workers hired by the county government in Towson (There are none now, he added).
8. Land be made available for the housing expansion of colored people, who are now hemmed in by "gentlemen's agreements of whites."

C. Quinn Jackson, president of the 12th District Democratic Club, welcoming the guests, said that Turner Station was a completely Republican and "completeley depressed" community before Mr. Adams founded the club.

He said its population voted Democratic 4-to-1 in 1952 and cited improvements it had obtained through mustering the largest proportion at Democrat strength of any such area in Maryland.

JOHN E. RAINES JR., prosecuting attorney for Baltimore County and candidate for Circuit Court judge in the May 11 primary, paid his respects to Mr. Adams as "a friend of long standing."

A. Gordon Boone, a second county commissioner and a candidate for Congress, congratulated Mr. Adams and the club for the contributions he and it had made for the cause of the Democratic Party and pledged his continued interest in all people's rights if nominated and elected congressman.

The Rev. William L. Jeffries delivered a ringing eulogy of the banquet's honoree, Irvin Adams, comparing him to Abou Ben Adam of the famed poem, whose "name shall stand above all the rest" on the rolls of those who deserve honor.

IN ACCEPTING gifts of Bulova watches for himself and his wife, Mr. Adams spoke modestly of his leadership of the club and credited its 25 years of successful functioning to the loyalty and hard work of the members. He received a standing ovation from the guests.

Chief Commissioner Birmingham, who during his last appearance backed for the deteriorating housing situation, on his appearance Wednesday was cheered for having done his best to keep his promises to Turner citizens.

He promised with pride to the fact that he had been able to place more colored policemen in the county and to have a $32,000 recreation field adjacent to Sollers Point High School.

IRVING ADAMS
Honored at banquet

OTHER SPEAKERS included: The Rev. Joseph A. Everett, pastor of New Shiloh Baptist Church; the Rev. Harold G. Nixon, pastor of New Life Presbyterian Church, who also gave the invocation, the Rev. Harold Kilgore, who gave the benediction;

Lloyal Randolph, president of the Council of Colored Democrats of Baltimore; Mrs. Carrie Bendis of Towson, who introduced some of the visitors from there; Richard Byrd, who urged the nomination of George Mahoney for the U.S. Senate as opposed to that of Millard Tydings; and Hugh Taylor, independent candidate for the U.S. Congress.

MUSIC FOR the program was furnished by the Sollers Point High School Band, directed by Joseph L. Day; the Heavenly Stars singing group from Greater St. John Baptist Church, and Miss Frances Watson, soloist. David Riddick is treasurer of the 12th District Democratic Club.

The menu for the $5 banquet consisted of:

Tomato juice, roast turkey and dressing, cranberry sauce, candied sweets, green peas, green salad, rolls and butter;

Ice cream, pickles, nuts, cake, olives and mints.

Among those seen among the guests were:

Robert B. Watts and Charles (Mouse) Dorsey of Baltimore; Bus Williams, Towson; Mrs. Fairlean Holcomb, Henry Wedley, Mrs. Carrie Stokes, Mr. and Mrs. Otis Cox, Johnson Adams, George Mitters, Mr. and Mrs. Eddie Lemons, Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Riddick, Mrs. Sermies Purroll;

Ousted families are given first chance at new homes

CINCINNATI, Ohio—This city is one which has found a workable solution to the problem of relocation of displaced families which has provided a major setback for urban redevelopment planners in Baltimore and throughout the nation.

Cincinnati's answer is found in a City Council resolution drafted by Vice-Mayor Theodore M. Berry and enacted by the council last September.

Under the resolution, displaced families are given the first opportunity for occupancy of new housing constructed on redevelopment sites.

The resolution further requires that:

No family can be required to move from proposed demolition sites until there is decent temporary or permanent housing available without segregation;

The city paid a fair price for so-called slum homes;

Families displaced get first chance to rent or occupy new units in the redeveloped areas.

Private developments in the project area may not restrict sale or rental units on the ground of race or religion.

Mr. Berry, a graduate of Lincoln University, is Cincinnati's first colored vice-mayor.

He got the appointment because he received a higher number of votes for the council than any other councilman. Cincinnati uses the proportionately representative system.

IN BALTIMORE, residents of many communities have greeted redevelopment proposals with something less than enthusiasm because of past failure to provide for relocation of displaced families.

To make way for the Waverly, Broadway and Armory redevelopment projects, nearly 2,000 colored families were moved out. On none of these sites has any provision been made to provide new living units for those displaced.

That Baltimore is not alone in its neglect of displaced families is evidenced by a report released last week by the New York City Women's City Club calling for an entirely new approach to the problem in that city.

The 46-page report charged that developers of Manhattan—the world's most populous island—have been using the city's power of condemnation to acquire slum sites for housing projects that have been occupied by white families almost exclusively, and then turning the land over to private developers who have built housing projects that have been occupied almost exclusively by white families.

The report pointed out also that nearly half of the families had not received suitable financial aid in moving and that most are paying higher rentals in their new quarters.

COME RAIN OR SHINE—When these children at the Town Neck School in Anne Arundel County want water, they leave their school building and walk some 20 yards to this pump—since the school has no running water. Built by the Rosenwald Foundation in the early 20's, this school was recently described as a "firetrap" by a county grand jury. Shown during the procedure they have become accustomed to are: Chester Lee, Joyce Jennings, Rebecca Williams, Deira Gilliam.

Wood pump

what we have, but we can't do much more than teach the children the most basic things and then send them out to other schools," she said.

Through the closed doors came the sounds of children and the teacher turned and started to reenter the building. She stopped at the door and looked around her again and then said:

"It's disgraceful, people should know."

THIS SCHOOL is one of seven in Anne Arundel County still equipped with outdoor toilets and each one of these seven schools is attended by colored children.

Once upon a time there were several white schools with such facilities, but they all disappeared last year, leaving only the seven colored schools with the outdated outhouses.

Harold McCain, assistant superintendent of county schools, has said that the office has preliminary plans for new buildings to replace the present Jones School and a similar one at Town Neck.

However, there was no indication of when the new schools will be constructed, or when arrangements will be made to replace the other five schools which the Board of Education admits are "inadequate."

Anne Arundel County has decided to "start integration" in the fall, but whether the seven ancient schools will be affected, has not yet been announced.

MEANWHILE, the colored pupils keep attending the seven schools that were built between 1932 and 1940 by the Rosenwald Foundation.

The Jones School is comprised of two buildings, one built by the Foundation, and the second which has been rented by the county from the African Good Hope Methodist Church.

No lavatory facilities or running water is available for the children in either of the two buildings. There is a kitchen with running water in the church building, but under the rental agreement, the pupils cannot use it.

WHEN THEY want water they have to walk some 100 yards from the annex or 25 yards from the main building to a wooden pump house where the water spills out ice cold.

The simple process of washing their hands involves filling a galvanized bucket with cold water, taking it back to the classroom, where the children their hands in a small wash basin.

When they wish to use the bathroom they have to leave the building and walk across a clearing to one of two wooden sheds where the whitewash has almost disappeared, and the naked boards show through.

Inside are rough stools with even rougher wooden tops. A roll of paper hangs in one of the sheds against the wall. There is no water.

SEVENTY CHILDREN attend this school at Jones from grades one to six. Since there are only three rooms and three teachers, two grades must share each of the building are gaps almost big enough to stick a finger through, even on a warm spring day, anyone standing over one of the cracks can feel a steady stream of air coming up from the outside.

In the winter time you keep a cold," said a teacher, "and the children have to wear their leggings inside the school. Sometimes the fire goes out and sometimes the pipe falls down. You have to watch the stove all the time."

The play area for the children is little more than a clearing, with half of this covered with small stones and rocks.

The same outdoor toilets at Jones School are there at the Town Neck School, with the shed also needing a coat of whitewash to hide their barren ugliness.

IN THE SAME general area, near Beechwood Park, is the Magothy School which also has outdoor toilets.

Behind the school is a graveyard, almost covered with leaves, debris and discarded bottles.

Inside the toilet is a sign that reads:

"This is Your Toilet Please Keep It Clean."

But other schools are to be found at Harley Neck, Eastport, Galesville, and Friendship.

These are the types of buildings being used in Anne Arundel County and the teachers are united in the belief that they are depriving their modern education at best is difficult, and at worst is almost impossible.

These are the schools used by colored pupils in historic Anne Arundel County, the site of the state capital, the Naval Academy, and schools with outside

FROM OUT OF THE PAST—This is one of the outdoor lavatories used at the Jones School in Anne Arundel. This is one of seven schools in Anne Arundel County so equipped, and each one of them serves colored pupils.

TEEN AGERS

In The News
by Howard Gaskins

Are all of us juvenile delinquents? The answer is definitely no. It just seems that way because the public only comes in contact with the worse side of teenagers.

Now look at the activities in which most teenagers participate. There was a dance give by the Chicksons at the Y.W.C.A. of which Gordon Gaskins Ayres is the president and Author Waters the treasurer. The music was played by Albert Dailey and His All-Stars.

On the party line, one was given by Barbara Milligs and Byron Moore, at 610 Gilmor St. The party was just what every teenager, who is trying to uphold the good standards of us teenagers, would like to attend.

Also at the Polytechnic High School, a show was sponsored by the Epsilon Omega Chapter Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, in which Harry Belafonte was the performer.

THIS DAY and time music blends right in with the teenagers' dances. The latest dance is called the "Cha Cha Cha," which is a decent and respectable dance. The "Cha Cha Cha" is lots of fun for everyone, even the Rock 'n Roll fans.

Now for the coming weekend: Just about all of Baltimore's teenagers plan to go to the Penn Relays in Philadelphia. The relays will be very colorful and fashionable.

The girls will wear walking shorts, slacks and shirts with button down collars, while the fellows will be wearing their walking shorts, striped cotton shirts and plaid shirts with matching plaid belt.

For the fellows top piece, they will wear an Italian straw hat or an Italo straw hat. On their feet there will be desert boots and dirty bucks.

ALSO THERE will be entertainment for the teen-agers who can not go to the Relays. For instance, the members of the Dramatics Class of Douglass High School will be on hand to their guest on Friday evening, April 27, at 8 p.m., in the Douglass High School auditorium. Admission is free.

The Dramatics Class of Douglass sent two one-act plays.

So now the public can eyeview some of the pleasant happenings in which teenagers engage.

The tenth annual Fine Arts Festival will open at Morgan State College on Sunday, April 29, and close Saturday, May 5.

A number of events, including "Colorful Sing Party" featuring pupils from the entire state, have been arranged and are open free of charge to the public.

There will also be a week-long exhibition of college sculpture in Soper Library and a student art exhibit in the Memorial Reflectory.

THE OPENING activity will be an informal fashion show and tea sponsored by the Home Economics Department on Sunday, at 4 p.m., in Memorial Reflectory.

Jane E. Enty will be in charge of the fashion show and Norma P. Dillard will supervise the foods area.

The second event will be sponsored by the Morgan Assembly Committee which is headed by James H. Fischer. The presentation will feature the Thimey Dance Theatre of Washington, on Monday at 10 a.m.

THE THIRD EVENT, Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. in Hill Gymnasium will be another ingenious creation of the talented choreographer Dorothy E. Phelps, instructor in physical education. "Round the Next Hill" is the 1956 title of the series of choreographical moods.

The fourth event is a first in that advanced music students will be presented to the entire student-body on Wednesday, at the regular 10 a.m. assembly hour. Voice, piano, string and wind instrumentalists will be heard at 9a time.

Playwright Waters Turpin, Morgan assistant professor, will present his Ira Aldridge Players on Wednesday and Thursday evenings, at the Center Theatre in another of his original productions.

This play, "St. Michael's Dawn," is one about the young Frederick Douglass.

ON FRIDAY at 10 a.m. in Hurt Gymnasium, Vada Easter, talented pianist and musicologist-professor at the Howard University School of Music will appear with the Morgan Symphonic Band in a reading of George Gershwin's ever popular "Rhapsody in Blue."

William Meredith A. Birche Jr., founder and conductor of an established institution of song, will bring his Baltimore Boys' Choir, Inc. to the campus and share the limelight with Dr. Easter and band.

THE SIXTH ANNUAL all state choral festival on Monday, May 7, will get under way at 11 a.m. Friday. This year the vocal, instrumental and vocal divisions will be represented by a number of vocalists and instrumentalists from 21 Maryland Secondary Schools.

The Festival Chorus of 75 voices will include 27 sopranos, 9 alto, 15 tenor, and 16 bass voices.

The festival band of 198 pieces will include seven flutes, Air; W. J. Irvine, Banneker, Catonsville; H. J. Stith Jr., Carver, Rockville; Isaiah Johnson, Carver, Towson; Clarence T. Rogers, Tubman, Clarksville; T. R. Rowlett, Douglass, Baltimore; Joseph L. Day, Sollers, Dundalk; Norman E. Ross, Kennard High, Centreville.

MARY E. JAMES, talented soprano and junior music major, will make her second operatic appearance in as many years as when she sings the lead in Puccini's "Madame Butterfly" (the book of John L. Long and the drama of David Belasco). The supporting cast includes:

William Graham, tenor; Florine Poulson, soprano; Herbert E. Brown, baritone; Charles Churn, tenor.

The production is under the direction of Dorothy Hunter Banks, assistant professor of music and director of the college opera and will be staged of Friday, in Hurt Gymnasium at 8 p.m.

Effiette M. Payne will again serve as coordinator for the May Day exercises on Saturday, at 2:30 p.m. Freddie Hill reigns as "Queen of May".

The activities of the week will close with the annual Beaux Arts Ball which will be held in Memorial Refectory on Saturday, at 8 p.m.
