'Conscience' is helpful to this man

"I took it, and after I got out of the house I brought it back. My conscience started working on me."

With this explanation on Friday in Northwestern Police Court, David McCloud, 20, 200 block N. Monroe St., was himself probation without a verdict on a larceny charge.

Miss Isabelle Martin, 1600 block W. Lanvale St., brought the charge claiming that McCloud had taken a tin box containing $80 from her apartment.

"He's my sister's boyfriend, and he was there at the house. When I went into the room the tin box was gone and so was he," she testified.

* * *

"I TOOK IT," admitted McCloud, "but I brought it back and put it under the tub in the bathroom."

Miss Martin said the box and the money had both been recovered, and Magistrate Linwood G. Koger Sr., granted probation with the note:

"It was a foolish thing to do, but you have been honest, and that plays a big part in my decision."

DADDY GRACE

Tells another reporter, 'I bought the property of Prophet Jones'

By EDWARD PEEKS

"I bought Prophet Jones' property in Detroit last week to help him out. . . ."

Bishop C. M. (Daddy) Grace was speaking Tuesday P.M. in the front room of his palatial home at 11 Logan Cir., NW.

Asked how much property was involved in the transaction, Bishop Grace shrugged his shoulders as he stood akimbo.

"I don't know about material things like that," he said. "You'll have to ask my chauffeur. He went over to Detroit. I didn't."

* * *

HIS STANCE suggested that he didn't have time to go into details about such a worldly matter. The long curving fingernails on his left hand seemed to twitch at his side.

"Have you heard about the trouble Prophet Jones got into?" Bishop Grace asked. A brown puckered on his bronze face surrounded by flowing gray hair.

He referred to the recent arrest of Prophet Jones on morals charges involving two teen-age boys.

* * *

"I BOUGHT Father Divine's heaven in New York in 1938," Bishop Grace said.

Then he frowned again, the red and blue fingermails beating a tatoo against his side. "Men shouldn't call themselves God and Prophet and Reverend."

Asked if he objected to being called Bishop Grace, he replied, "There is but one bishop. He is God. It says so in the Bible.

"I am a man of the Bible," he added. "I am from Jerusalem."

Bishop Grace was not disputed on that or the property he said he had bought from Prophet Jones.

* * *

A MAID wearing a gingham apron came up and told Bishop Grace he had a long distance call waiting from Philadelphia.

"You can see the chauffeur over at the mission on Seventh St.," he said, going to the phone.

The chauffeur could not be reached. Maybe he had gone back to Detroit to complete the property settlement.

Says he's not afraid of 'wife,' threatens 'to spank' reporter

By MARY STRATFORD

Bishop C. M. (Daddy) Grace came to District Court, Wednesday, but not for spiritual reasons. He was interested in the practical business of building a defense against charges brought by his alleged wife.

Leader of a religious sect, Bishop Grace has been given until April 20 by a Federal judge to answer questions posed in a District Court petition by Mrs. Louvenia A. Roy

* * *

MRS. ROYSTER is seeking to establish she is Bishop Grace's wife. She has filed a petition for support. Bishop Grace claims he does not know Mrs. Royster.

At 12:30 p.m., the Rev. Mr. Grace appeared in the file room at District Court. He was accompanied by an attorney, and a bearded bodyguard.

* * *

ATTIRED in a blue formal suit, he paused inside the door, way, where he was approached by a reporter.

"What am I doing down here? I am here to transact a business matter," the Rev. Mr. Grace asserted.

* * *

HE TURNED the side of his face and appeared to have difficulty hearing anything but a loud noise in the room. When it was repeated directly into his ear, the Rev. Mr. Grace responded:

"The business I am on does not concern me. I am with a friend."

* * *

RETIRING to a table, the Rev. Mr. Grace discussed a case file which had been given to his attorney by a clerk. It was later learned the file contained litigation in the suit brought by Mrs. Royster.

As his bodyguard remained posted at the door, the Rev. Mr. Grace was overheard saying to the lawyer:

"It's not because I am afraid."

His voice continued to rise and fall.

"Bosh!"

"I could cross-sue!"

"Witnesses."

* * *

AT ONE point, he appeared distracted by an eavesdropper.

"Newspapers!" he said to his attorney.

* * *

FORTY - FIVE minutes later, the Rev. Mr. Grace rose. His attorney helped him into his coat, then fluffed the sect leader's long hair, which was caught beneath the overcoat collar, onto his neck.

The portly, gray-haired baptisty minister stopped at a nearby table.

"What you doing? Writing letters to your sweetheart?"

* * *

JOVIALITY spread across his face as he chuckled at his own joke. Above his lips, a mustache had been carefully etched with a black eyebrow pencil.

"You tell that newspaper Daddy Grace has bought Prophet Jones' palace in Detroit," he continued.

"No, I won't talk about the price. If I pay a man 10 cents and the price should have been 12 cents, do you think I'd tell? And if I pay a man 12 cents and the price should have been 10 cents, you think I'd tell?

"Why did Prophet Jones sell to me? Haven't you been reading about the trouble he's in? He needs money.

"Prophet Jones had all those fine clothes and big cars.

"And now he's walking.

"You want to know about the price." He chuckled, shook his finger playfully, and tapped the reporter on the chin:

"Sweetheart, Daddy's going to spank you," he said.

He left the file room then, accompanied by the bearded bodyguard. He was still glowing with satisfaction.

—Fatal Marine hike

Leroy Thompson, 18, of 296 Quincy St., Brooklyn.

Tuesday, Mrs. Lucille Wood, mother of Norman, said:

"We tried to talk Norman out of enlisting until he got out of high school, but he wanted to go. He liked the Marines, and as long as he liked it, I liked it.

The 17-year-old youth had just finished the first semester of his junior year at Bay Shore High School, where he starred as a football end and was a sprinter and broad jumper on the track team.

* * *

MRS. PEARL THOMPSON, the mother of Leroy, said she tried to persuade her son to finish his final year at Boys High School, but he insisted on enlisting.

"I don't want to get in trouble like all the rest of the kids around here," she quoted him as saying.

Mrs. Thompson said he wrote last week saying he liked the Marines, was working hard and was looking forward to his first trip home at the end of boot camp training in six weeks.

SURVIVORS, TESTIFYING before the board of inquiry, Tuesday, told hair-raising accounts of frantic efforts and heroism on the part of Sgt. Matthew C. McKeon, who ordered the march, and others to rescue the men who apparently waded into a tidal wave which was more treacherous than imagined.

McKeon led the unit out on what was considered "routine" disciplinary training. The man died while obeying his orders.

He is under guard pending decision of the board of inquiry.

Chapel service for the six victims was held Thursday at the chapel at the Marine Base, with an honor guard standing by. The bodies were then shipped to the homes of the victims' families, while an intensive investigation of disciplinary march is being conducted by the Marine Corps.

Group urges curb on block-busting

"Block-busting" can be curbed if the Real Estate Board, the city government and private citizens "take up arms against these enemies of stable neighborhoods," the Baltimore Commission on Human Relations said in a statement made public this week.

The Commission urged the three groups to "exert their utmost efforts to save those parts of the city which mayb still be salvaged."

The Commission was created by Mayor Thomas D'Alesandro and the City Council to be a watchdog of intergroup relations with the purpose of preventing or at least minimizing intergroup friction.

"THE FACTOR which is contributing the most to inter-group tension in Baltimore at this time is the so-called practice of 'block-busing' as it is being carried on by certain unscrupulous real estate operators of both races," the report said.

According to the Commission's statement, "block-busters" acquire houses in stable neighborhoods at "panic prices" and resell them to colored people at inflated rates. This leads to the houses being broken up into apartments, causing deterioration, the report pointed out.
