Recall the murders in Mississippi

WASHINGTON

A five-member delegation of women, representing a number of national organizations, met with Attorney General Herbert Brownell, Wednesday, and asked the government to curb the wave of lawlessness in the South.

The meeting was a follow-up of a strongly-worded civil and human rights resolution adopted at the 20th annual convention of the National Council of Negro Women.

It condemned the lack of action by high government officials in connection with the southern atrocities — particularly in Mississippi.

• • •

THE DELEGATION gave the Attorney General a resume of the atrocities taking place in certain areas of this country and informed him of the efforts which the council women are making to build a strong citizenship program.

"How can we tell the women in those areas to register and vote," asked Dr. Dorothy Ferebee, "when they are in fear and terror of their lives if they attempt to exercise this right?

"You must tell us, Mr. Attorney General, what to tell these women."

• • •

BOTH MRS. MARIAN JACKSON and Mrs. Elsie Keys, representing thousands of business and church women, declared that a large part of the discussion on human and civil rights during their recent conventions were directed toward the outrages in Mississippi.

"Our women are terribly concerned about these brutalities," they said. "They want to know what the President and the Attorney General are doing about this. They have felt very much let down because of the silence emanating from your office."

• • •

MRS. JUANITA MITCHELL, chairman of the council's legal committee, went over point by point the legal aspects of the defiance of law and order in the South.

She pointed out the need for federal intervention and the need for strengthening all existing federal statues so that the Attorney General would have no impediment to action.

She felt that investigation had not been thorough enough and that the failure of the Attorney General to come out with a statement was encouraging the lawbreakers.

• • •

SHE ASKED the Attorney General to make known to Congress the need for laws that will make it possible for the federal government to intervene when law and justice are mocked.

Mrs. William Thomas Mason, national president of NCNW, asked why Citizens Councils and other organizations like them should not be put on the subversive list.

She stated that peonage still exists in Mississippi. She had just been informed of this by persons who were afraid to have their names known.

• • •

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL suggested that a Congressional investigation should be requested to unearth the facts.

He stated that he was very glad to have had the opportunity to confer with the delegation about the problems discussed. He suggested that a plea be made to include a positive statement in the President's state of the union message.

He assured the delegation that the problems discussed would receive due consideration and that he would give serious and immediate consideration to their requests.

He told the group that he would like to meet with them again as soon as possible after the President had delivered his state of the union message.

The delegation consisted of Mrs. Mason, president of the Council; Dr. Ferebee, past president; Mrs. Mitchell
