High schools may form own league

- List Carver, Douglass and Dunbar
- Forest Park, City and Poly among others

By SAM LACY

Full integration in high school athletics appears likely, possibly before the basketball season gets under way.

This conclusion was reached by the AFRO this week following an investigation of the evils which have existed in Baltimore inter-scholastic program since the desegregation ruling.

The high hopes being entertained in this direction, are based on a proposal to organize a public school league — one which will include the city's high schools.

To do this, the six schools which formerly were designated as "white," will have to withdraw from the Maryland Scholastic Association. And a resolution urging such action is expected to pass the Legislative Committee for Interscholastic Activities at its November meeting.

• • •

THE COMMITTEE is comprised of the principals of local city high schools, a majority of whom already are on record as approving integrated athletics but have hesitated to pull out of the Maryland Scholastic Association.

This hesitance, according to one of the members of the committee, has been due to a sympathetic attitude toward the 12 private and parochial schools which complete the makeup of the MSA.

These smaller institutions depend largely on the public schools to make up varsity schedules that are sufficiently attractive to support their athletic program.

• • •

HOWEVER, SINCE the Supreme Court ruling banning segregation in education, three of Baltimore's public high schools have had their sports program collapse from a lack of games.

Douglass High School, Dunbar High and Carver Vocational are not members of the MSA. One of them, Carver, filed application for membership last year, but was turned down.

• • •

MEANWHILE, integration has progressed on all sides of this city, Washington, D.C., which has five high schools that formerly competed with Douglass, Dunbar and Carver, is in its second year of integrated athletics.

Result is that the D.C. schools are kept busy in their own league and have no openings on their schedules to accommodate the three local teams.

For that reason, plus their inability to crack the MSA, Douglass, Dunbar and Carver were forced to scramble for football games this fall.

• • •

THE SITUATION became a disgrace on the Baltimore inter-scholastic front when it developed that two of the schools here came up with only four games for their varsity eleven.

Further evidence of how unfortunate matters have become, is couched in the revelation that, as of now — the third week in October — Douglass has yet to play a game.

The Ducks were scheduled to play Carver (one of four games they were able to get) at Easterwood last Friday, but rain prevented.

• • •

PREVIOUSLY, though, Douglass participated in a "friendly scrimmage" with the Patterson Park varsity, at the request of the latter.

When the venture worked out so satisfactorily to both parties, Patterson Park reportedly suggested, a follow-up "scrimmage" (no scores kept) between their junior varsity teams.

• • •

AGAIN EVERYONE concerned was pleased with developments, and this second meeting on the athletic field assertedly lead to an invitation to Douglass to send representatives to a Patterson Park talent program to be held there in early December.

• • •

Inasmuch as Patterson Park has been suspected of holding out against the inclusion of the three "colored" schools in a city-wide scholastic organization, the happenings of the past month are taken as encouraging signs.

• • •

PATTERSON PARK principal G. Gordon Woelper, in fact, has hinted that he is contemplating recommending abandonment of the MSA and the formation of the new public school loop, at the November meeting of the legislative committee.

While such a move, if decided upon, may not mean the immediate dissolution of the hostile MSA, it could quite conceivably solve the problem of future scheduling for Douglass, at a beginning with basketball.

W. Va. Hopes To Shake Slump Against Morgan

Interstate rivals clash in Capital Classic Sat. night

WASHINGTON

Convinced that the worst is behind them, West Virginia State's rested Yellow Jackets will go all out here tomorrow night (Saturday) to shake their losing streak against the mighty Morgan State College Bears.

The Bears will be favored as the two interstate rivals square off in the 14th annual Capital Classic at Griffith Stadium at 8:30 o'clock.

Hard set on getting back into the winning stride and take the edge in the football feud with Morgan, now tied at 3-5 with one tie, Coach Mark Cardwell's Yellow Jackets put an open date to good use last week and will enter Saturday night's contest in generally good physical condition.

• • •

MENTALLY, THE club seems to be "up" for this game which went into the books as a 32-26 defeat for them last year after they led the Bears for three quarters. Morgan's thrill-packed three-touchdown final period decided the issue.

Coach Cardwell has one lineup change for the big test. He has shifted Bob Cashwell, versatile end from the flank position, to the quarterback spot. Jim Gladden, the regular signal-caller, will be ready for action at a moment's notice, however.

With Cashwell at quarter, Cardwell will complete the Yellow Jackets' backfield with Carl Hairston and Bob Brown, halfbacks, and Carter Howard, fullback.

• • •

MORGAN IS NOT too excited about being placed in the favorite's role. "Frankly, we're scared of West Virginia, but we plan to give them the best game we can possibly play," Coach Eddie P. Hurt said Thursday.

"We expect a tough game. We're afraid of West Virginia. We always are. They're an explosive team and moreover, they're always at their best in these classic games. But we're going to give them a fight."

Admitting that he hopes "Lady Luck will smile on us," Coach Hurt revealed that the staff has not been relying on luck alone, but rather has spent the entire week strengthening Morgan offense and defense and working especially on the quarterback position.

To give first string quarterback Bill Billups extra support if needed, the coaches have been training big Jim Courtney, freshman from Baltimore in quarterback chores this week.

Courtney looked good playing against Howard last Saturday during the second half and the staff has been building him up to give him the training to play more in the Classic game.

• • •

JERRY McARTHUR and Charlie Porter, halfbacks will carry the burden of the Bears' running attack, with Charlie Reinhardt at fullback.

Up front the Bears will line up with Bob Jacobs, center; Jim Austin and Gil Prather, guards; Bill Clark and Bill Gordon, tackles, and Arthur Dean and Jack Boeler, ends. Prather, Fairmont Heights High graduate, of Glen Arden, Md., is co-captain with Jesse Miles, end, from Orange, N.J.

On the starting line for West Virginia will be Willie Smith and Jim Turner, ends; Lee Mullins and John Flowers, tackles; Walter Worthington and O'Brien Scruggs, guards; and Wyatt McGuinnis, center.

McGuinnis is one of the four white players on the interscholastic squad. John Caldwell, guard; Dick Strickland, guard; and Daniel Smithson, tackle, are the others.

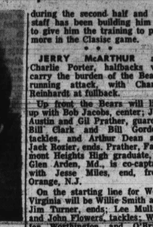
• • •

UPWARD OF 15,000 fans are expected to see the contest which should be a toss-up though Morgan is favored on the strength of its 3-1 record against West Virginia's 1-3.

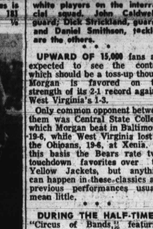
Only common opponent between them was Central State College which Morgan beat in Baltimore 19-6, while West Virginia lost to the Ohioans, 19-6, at Xenia. On this basis the Bears rate two-touchdown favorites over the Yellow Jackets, but anything can happen in these classics and previous performances usually mean little.

• • •

DURING THE HALF-TIME a "Circus of Bands," featuring more than 400 musicians, from seven secondary schools and Morgan's Marching Band, will be presented under direction of Dr. R. Hayes Steider, band director at Morgan.



JESSE MILES shares Morgan's co-captaincy with Prather. A senior, Miles is from Orange, N.J. An end, Miles is 21 years old and weighs 181 pounds.



GIL PRATHER, 22-year-old Morgan co-captain is a graduate of Fairmont Heights High and lives in Glen Arden, Md. Prather, a guard, weighs 205 pounds and is 5-foot, 1-inch tall.

Colts show town how to be popular

Reap dividends in fan loyalty, at gate

By SAM LACY

A crowd estimated at between 40,000 and 55,000 is anticipated for Sunday's game between the Baltimore Colts and the Washington Redskins at Memorial Stadium.

The promise of an over-capacity turnout is a tribute to the Colts who, in addition to winning games this season, have been winning friends for the past three years.

That the Baltimoreans are largely responsible for the upturn of the pro game in this area is an indisputable fact. Their opponents on Sunday are the extreme opposites of the Colts on the popularity scoreboard.

DURING THEIR 18 years in Washington, nothing has been done to endear them to the fans.

The Redskins are a football team, period. In fact, there are a goodly number who insist a question-mark should be substituted for the period. They contend the comment should be:

The Redskins are a football team?

Be that as it may, the purpose here is to take cognizance, at long last and in print, of the tremendous strides made by the Colts toward full acceptance by the city's fans.

NO TEAM in Baltimore history has been so enthusiastically received by colored and white alike.

The present Colts are a tonic for what has long been an anemic community. Anemic from the standpoint of sincerity in integration, and clear and healthful thinking.

Neither their predecessors, the old Colts, nor the Orioles (baseball) or Bullets (basketball) or Clippers (hockey) showed the inclination to operate openly in the desire to strengthen without a constant eye on racial lines.

SINCE THEIR first season in Baltimore, president Carroll Rosenbloom, general manager Don Kellett and their associates have worked diligently toward the end of giving the town a representative team.

There has been no hesitance whatsoever in acquiring players they thought could be helpful to the cause. Color was a minor consideration, if it was a consideration, at all.

IN THAT FIRST year—1953—the Colts, from Rosenbloom down to the rawest recruit on the ranks, openly blasted a downtown hotel which had insulted the friends of one or its colored players.

That was when the team bolted a banquet at the Lord Baltimore Hotel after Buddy Young, George Taliaferro and Mel Embree left the place because service at the cocktail bar had been refused a party of colored guests.

It was on that same occasion that Rosenbloom spent two hours driving around the city in a cold rain, in company with the writer and auto dealer Charley Griebel, searching for Young, etc., to persuade the tan contingent to return.

• • •

IT WAS ALSO at that time that Rosenbloom immediately ordered cancellation of a series of manufacturers' conventions which he headed, and which had been scheduled for the Lord Baltimore.

Since that time, the Colts have let no opportunity pass to sign a player who appeared to be a worthwhile prospect.

BY THE SAME token, they have shown no reluctance to cut off a colored player once his usefulness seemed to have ended. Which is as it should be.

Because of this attitude, this department has never heard the Colts critized when they have had occasion to release colored personnel.

ALWAYS WHEN other local teams were involved in such releases, or trades, there were those who suspected the motives and made their suspicions known.

Baltimore, therefore, is expected to turn out en mass Sunday, when "their" Colts come home from three weeks on the road.
