The Necessity Of The Red Cross

General Pershing, commander-in-chief of the American Expeditionary Force, has designated the American Red Cross as the ony relief society authorized to undertake the work of locating and administering to the American wounded who have been removed to the various hospitals in France. This order was issued following the receipt of many applications from militarized civilians asking permission to visit wounded Americans who are undergoing treatment in the French hospitals. It is designed to conform to the policy adopted to centralize the activities of relief organizations overseas and to facilitate the most necessary work of the American Red Cross with the army in France.

In the 83 departments of France there is an average of 50 hospitals to a department, totalling about 4,500 French hospitals. To cover these hospitals systematically in order to find and keep in touch with the American wounded assigned thereto, the American Red Cross is perfecting a complete and thorough method of organizing France into nine zones. Each zone will embrace certain departments and the full responsibility for the work will be decentralized to the American Red Cross official in charge of the zone. The plan provides, in part, for the enlistment of the American women residing in France with a view to appointing them local agents for the American Red Cross, that they may carry on whatever work may be outlined for them in connection with the service in the French hospitals.

Not only will this plan of organization provide for much better service to French hospitals than heretofore has been possible on the part of the Red Cross, but it will accomplish an added good also, in that it will actually employ a great number of American women, as well as French women who speak English but who have been, previously, unorganized for American Red Cross work.

An Old Missouri Mule.

To nearly every U. S. fighter in France "Tobe" is just an ornery ol' Missouri mule. But this doesn't apply to Private Victor Irminger, of the marines, formerly a farmer near Avondale, Mo.

Irminger was basking in the sun near an old stone wall in the war zone during a rest hour. His near slumber was disturbed by the terrible bray emanating from a noisy specimen of his home state's livestock.

There could be no mistake. Irminger hurried to the other side of the wall and there discovered old Tobe to whom he had said good-bye back on the farm.

After Irminger's enlistment an army mule buyer spied Tobe and inducted him into military service. The story of how the marine and the mule discovered themselves both engaged in the business of beating the Hun was set forth in a letter from Irminger to his relatives in Avondale.
