Duo-violin concert given at Leadenhall Baptist Church

By ADAH K. JENKINS

A-ROVING: To Washington, D.C. to hear the final concert of the fourth annual "Music for Young America" performed by the National Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Howard Mitchell (former conductor of the Baltimore Symphony).

Soloists were 16 year-old Paul Rosenthal, violinist from Julliard and Daniel Dorn, 14 year-old 'cellist, also from New York. These two amazing young musicians were the remaining contestants in the 1959 line up of 500 high school students from over 30 states.

At this, the final concert, the orchestra voted on the winning contestant. The honors went to Paul Rosenthal, who played in masterly fashion the lengthy and immensely difficult Braham's Violin Concerto.

Daniel Dorn, in the Lalo "Cello Concerto," displayed a persuasive tone and technical resources of a high order. With years will come, no doubt, the interpretational ability that marks the mature artist.

Dr. Mitchell, who was M. C. as well as conductor, congratulated both players upon their performance which was "a test of endurance as well as musicianship."

Theprise of $2,000 was presented personally at the conclusion of the concert. The cellist received a cash award also.

The orchestra, which is 28 years old, left for a 12-week tour of Central and South American under the sponsorship of the Department of State.

Attending from Baltimore were Hannonia Caldwell, Olivia Copeland, both from Eastern High School and Frances Jenkins from Lemmel Junior High.

THERE is a rising tide of interest in string music. This is a good omen, as symphony orchestras, professional and amateur, big and little throughout the country are crying for well trained, experienced string players.

William Haithcock, of the music faculty of Morgan State College and Matthew Fraling, a former student there, are in the forefront of local musicians who are working diligently in the orchestral field.

Recently they gave a duo-violin concert of genuine worth at Leadenhall Baptist Church, under the auspices of the Young Men and Young Women's Club of the church.

Both are musicians of sterling ability and considerable experience, which was manifested throughout their thought-fully planned program. Music ranged from the classic Bach "Concerto" to modern dissonances of Bartok. Mr. Haithcock gave timely program notes on the various schools of music represented on the program.

An unusual note was added by the group of well-known hymns with organ accompaniment. Elizabeth Day, a graduate of Morgan's music department, presided well at the piano and organ. She also accompanied Ora Williams, soprano, of the English department at Morgan.

Combining a voice of considerable range with a gracious presence Miss Williams presented the aria "Porgi, Amor Qualche Ristor" (Pour, love, sweet consolation) from "A Birthday" song by Woodman.

With these and other talented musicians on the campus Morgan may soon grace the new Fine Arts auditorium with a Chamber Music Series.

If the college taking a lead along with other progressive institutions like Leadenhall Baptist Church a lively interest may be created in the many small ensembles (often combined with the voice) that are to be found in music of all periods.

• • •

THE FOURTH and last chamber music concert of the annual series at Mt. Vernon Place Methodist Church was held in the Mt. Vernon Room on a recent evening. Rice Benet, choir master and organist of the church, conducted the Mt. Vernon Chamber Chorus, an interracial group. Cynthia Furr, contralto and Mary Kaye Bates, soprano were the featured soloists.

Since one hears each season an increasingly large number of works by Johann Sebastian Bach, this program afforded interesting contrast by two compositions from Heinrich Schutz, a forerunner and Dietrich Buxtehude, a contemporary of the great master.

There were four psalms from Schutz's collection which showed his masterly combination of the lively, decorative early Italian style with the more solid, vigorous German music of the Reformation period.

The Buxtehude offering was his "Missa Brevis" (short mass). Thus one was afforded an opportunity to hear the rich and elaborate counterpoint that flowered later in the magnificent genius of Bach and the Golden Age of Counterpoint.

The purity of the rules and regulations of this classic mass, it have inspired the New Classicists of to-day. The Mt. Vernon singers did "Te Deum" (To Thee, O God) by Ralph Vaughtn - Williams, the late English composer.

Mr. Benet, who conducts with well controlled energy, succeeded in getting the militant quality of the work with its vital rhythms and well built climaxes.

The choral part of the concert was completed with the modern "Frau Musica" by the contemporary German, Hindemith, with Shari Fleming, Edward Byer and Hal Furr of the choir, as soloists. Their beauty was enhanced by the highly musical accompaniments of Mr. Benet.

Mrs. Furr, who has a voice of considerable breadth and flexibility sang three scriptural Songs by Brahams, with discriminating regard for their somber beauty.

Songs by the modernists, Faure, Dello Joio, Roy Harris and Schoemberg were done by Miss Bates.

Hermina F. Lang lent effective accompaniments to the chorus.

• • •

ABOUT-TOWN: Heard at the dedication exercises of the Lemel High School excellent choral music by the Edmondson Senior High School Choir, under direction of Mrs. Georgianna Chester.

The audience joined in the final chorus of Steffe - Wilsinsky's arrangement of "Battle Hymn of the Republic," also sharing in the enthusiastic applause of the audience and the compliments of Miss Hermione Wharton, principal of Lemmel, was the woodbourne Junior High School Orchestra, under the direction of Leigh Martinet.

Heard over Station WJZ-TV, a series of seven programs entitled "Lets Meet the Keyboard," done by Hugh O'Meagher under the auspices of Young Musicians Series in cooperation with the local Board of Education.

Mrs. Olive Winston, then president of YMS, was mistress of ceremonies. The series traced the history of the harpsichord, forerunner of the piano, the development of the modern piano and what composers do with the instrument. Several young students from local schools played during one of the programs, which was entitled "What You Can Do with the Piano."

Heard at the annual "parade of Human Dolls" sponsored by the Baltimore NAACP, the Children's Choir of Sharp Street Methodist Church, directed by Mrs. Frances Tilghman. The voices were fresh, well placed and the numbers were done with good taste.
