New Ghana envoy in capital

WASHINGTON (NPA) — Ghana's new Ambassador, W. M. Q. Halm, presented his credentials to President Eisenhower Tuesday morning.

Afterwards he told White House reporters that he had expected to find "a stern old soldiers," but instead "found an impressive, cheerful and fit middle - aged gentleman."

He revealed a profound sympathy and interest in underdeveloped countries such as my own country. He appeared imbued with the desire to know almost all of our needs and how best to serve these needs.

"According to the pictures I see in the newspaper, you paint him old. He is not old. You do him so much injustice."

Mr. Halm said the President asked questions, and they talked about a hydroelectric project and the resources of Ghana. "He has a desire to serve our needs," Mr. Halm added.

SEES IKE — Gaily dressed in native attire, Ghana's new Ambassador to the United States W. M. Q. Halm leaves the White House Tuesday morning after presenting his credentials. Later Mr. Halm met local community leaders at a reception at the Ghana Embassy.

Integration suit filed

MIAMI — A suit was filed in Federal court, Thursday, by the Miami Beach branch of the NAACP to desegregate this city's swimming pools, parks and other recreational facilities.

This action came on the heels of a unanimous vote by the City Commission on Wednesday to reverse an order by City Manager Ira F. Willard on Tuesday to open the facilities to all.

The Rev. Theodore Gibson, president of the NAACP branch and rector of Christ Episcopal Church, blamed politicians — as well as the Commission — for the reversal of Mr. Willard's order.

HE NOTED that there had been no indications of violence before, or after, the facilities were opened on an integrated basis.

"Six youths," the minister said, "gained admittance to two different pools on Wednesday."

Mayor K. High, however, told the Commission prior to taking a vote: "I have great fear of what would happen if this order were put into effect."

Fred Devant, one of the Commissioners, claimed that Mr. Willard acted without authority.

He is of the opinion that any situation where two races are "scantily clad" is "calculated to cause some disturbance."

WHEN CITY Manager Willard ordered the city's facilities opened Tuesday, he said:

"It is established that these people have the right to use the city facilities and we must meet the problems as they develop."

He further pointed out that the city had evaded the issue as long as it could. He said he gave the order on the basis of a ruling by William Pallot, the city attorney.

The Rev. Mr. Gibson and his organization have pledged to aid in the prevention of trouble. The association's plan included a general educational program and making available to the city information and the services of the membership.

PUBLIC BEACHES in the Miami area were not affected by the city manager's original order. The public beaches are operated by either Dade County or Miami Beach.

The Rev. Mr. Gibson said that the public beaches are the next target of the association.

He explained that the NAACP will attempt to desegregate the beaches in the same manner as the Miami recreational facilities problem was attacked.

adverse criticism of Gov. Hodges.

WHEN PRESIDENT Toure landed at the National Airport Monday, he was not greeted there by President Eisenhower. Because of health reasons, Mr. Eisenhower has been forced to curtail such open air activities from October through May.

President and Mrs. Eisenhower greeted the visitors in the lobby of the White House. The party from Guinea was accommodated at Blair House, the official Presidential guest house.

When the U.S. military plane landed with President Toure and party after the flight from New York, a plush red carpet was rolled out for the guests.

M. BUCHANAN, state department protocol chief, was first off the plane and took his place ahead of Vice President Nixon in the receiving line. He introduced Mr. Toure and other dignitaries to the vice president as they alighted from the plane.

Along with Mr. and Mrs. Nixon in the receiving line were: the Chief of Staff of the U.S. Army and Mrs. Lemnitzer; the Dean of the Diplomatic Corps and Mrs. Seville-Sacasa, and Mr. and Mrs. M McLaughlin.

Mrs. Toure wore a beige alpaca coat. She has a light brown complexion. Mr. Toure wore a double breasted black and grey-striped suit. Mrs. Nixon presented Mrs. Toure with a bouquet of red roses.

The entire party stood at attention as the 21-gun salute was boomed out and the two national anthems were played.

"WE ARE honored that you are visiting the United States representing the newest republic," Mr. Nixon told his guest.

He assured Mr. Toure that he will "find among our people interest in you personally and also in your country and the future toward which you are working."

Mr. Toure replied that he hoped to established closer ties between the United States and Guinea — "and not merely Guinea but the whole of Africa.

"It is our firm conviction that as the people and government of the United States know and understand the problem of Africa better, they will be able to get a closer and more fruitful understanding between our people."

A police escort led a motorcade into the White House grounds where the top officials met President Eisenhower.

THE PARTY from Guinea landed Sunday in New York and, after being greeted by national and local officials, spent the night in the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel.

State department officials see the Guinea President's visit as significant. They believe the 37-year-old leader can help hold Africa against communist penetration.

Independence came to Guinea when it voted overwhelmingly for the French constitution Sept. 28, 1958. Twelve other Africa colonies voted for the new constitution.

Guinea alone voted "no." The French pulled out and left Guinea independent but without resources and advance preparations.

Soviet bloc countries stepped into the gap and gave the new nation aid in arms and other necessities. America sent only 3,000 tons of rice, 3,000 tons of flour and an English teacher.

Mercia Wardell, both of Baltimore, and the Rev. Marmaduke Carter, pastor of St. Philip Lutheran Church of Chicago.

DR. CARL MURPHY, chairman of the board of trustees at Morgan, said upon being informed of Mr. Carter's death:

"The Morgan State College community is saddened by the sudden death of a very fine administrator.

"James Carter was born on the campus and since graduation, 45 years ago, occupied positions from student worker to secretary of the board and acting president.

"He would have retired this June with respect and affection of the college and its highest degree.

"The college is in mourning."

DEAN GEORGE GRANT, whom the trustees will likely name acting president until Dr. Jenkins returns in December, said on behalf of the college:

"The whole college community is shocked at the sudden and unexpected death of Mr. James H. Carter, acting president.

"For 45 years, he has been the friend and confidant of generations of college students, faculty and staff members. His cheery personality, readiness to advance a hand of friendship, and his completely unselfish nature have won him a multitude of friends.

"Jimmy Carter was an institution. We will have to accept his loss, but it is with heavy heart."

Mr. Carter was known as the 'biggest little man' at Morgan State College, and it was said he was practically reared on the college grounds.

He was the son of the late Rev. Nathaniel Carter, a Lutheran minister and the former Miss Susan Slowe.

He stood just five feet, and weighed a little over a hundred pounds. He was beloved because of his pleasing personality and friendly disposition.

As a child he romped on Morgan's grounds and he could recall that what is now an imposing campus of twenty-two buildings and facilities was in the days of his childhood just a barn and a field with a few houses. around.

His first formal association with the college began in 1912 when he enrolled as a student, working his way through college at the "big, big" salary of $4 a month.

He had been at Morgan ever since — graduating in 1916 to a position as secretary to the President, Dr. John O. Spencer, whom he'd served in his college days as a student clerk.

As an employe, Mr. Carter had served successively as secretary to the president, tutor of English, German and mathematics, as secretary of the college, registrar, assistant to the president, business manager, and for a second time as assistant to the president.

FOR TWENTY-FIVE of these years he lived on Morgan's grounds—many of these years with his wife, the former Hattie Phifer, a Morgan graduate who as a teacher established Morgan's department of home economics.

He'd served under three of Morgan's seven presidents—Dr. Spencer, who served from 1901 to 1937; Dr. D. O. W. Holmes, Morgan president emeritus and first colored president of the institution, who served from 1937 - 1948; and Dr. Jenkins, incumbent president, who began his service in 1948.

Other presidents of the institution have been J. Emory Round, who served from 1869 to 1882; W. Maslin Frysinger, 1882-1888; John F. Wagner, 1888-1901, and Charles E. Young 1901 to 1902.

In his association with the institution, Mr. Carter has seen Morgan through crisis upon crisis.

HE recalled that one of the worst of these came during the depression when the institution was threatened with closing because of lack of funds.

Teachers' salaries were cut from the standard $200 per month 60 per cent to $80.50 per month.

This lasted for 18 months, beginning in September 1931, and Mr. Carter alone suffered a salary loss during that time of $5,500.

AGAIN WHEN Dr. Spencer became ill, Mr. Carter shared with Dean George C. Grant and Registrar Edward N. Wilson the managing of the school until Dr. Holmes was inaugurated president.

Just three weeks ago, on Oct. 10, when Dr. Jenkins left for a three-month lecture tour in Europe, the college's board of trustees designated him acting president!

And, of course, he's seen Morgan grow and grow and grow from the little college with a handful of students to an institution serving 2,473 students annually, with a regular faculty of 152 and buildings and grounds valued at over $18,000,000.

As a tribute to Mr. Carter, there will be a minute of silence prior to the start of Morgan's Homecoming game on Saturday.

Former principal sues District school board

WASHINGTON

L. Roscoe Evans, former principal of Shaw Junior High School, took his case to court last week in a suit against the Board of Education for disability retirement pay.

Mr. Evans, 1600 block Second St., NW, resigned his post after he was charged with a morals offense.

He contends in the suit that he was mentally ill at the time he submitted his resignation, which as a result was not valid.

A COMMITTEE of doctors, appointed by District government school board, ruled that Mr. Evans was ill when he resigned.

But the board sent the report back to the commissioners to decide whether the conclusion was binding on the board to act on the former principal's request for disability retirement.

Disability benefits rate higher in pay for a former member of the school system than straight retirement.

Mr. Evans pleaded guilty to the morals charge in District Court and was placed on three year's probation.

children too young to fully realize what had happened.

Every now and then they would move to a rear room where other relatives and friends were gathered, and there would come sounds of loud sobbing.

At the time of the hanging, the deceased man was babysitting for his daughter, Mrs. Mary Gaither, who had left her three small children in his care and gone to her place of employment.

His wife, Mrs. Mabry, who is employed as a housekeeper, had also gone to work.

The shocked brother, who said he lived around the corner from the Ellamont St. home in the 3100 block Presbury St., said the deceased many often passed his home going to the store, and the children would come in his home to get some candy and wait for him.

"THIS TIME," he explained, "they stayed so long, I said to them your daddy— they called him daddy— is a long time coming from the store.

"Then one of them said, 'Daddy is home upstairs, and has spit on the floor.'"

Mr. Mabry said he rushed around to his brother's Ellamont St. home, found the front door open, and ran inside calling out his name.

"Then I ran upstairs," he said slowly, reddened eyes wide with shock as he recalled. "And the sight I saw was terrible!"

Plans at AFRO presstime were to ship his body to Roanoke Rapids, N.C., where his parents, Paul and Mrs. Polly Mabry reside for burial.

Other survivors include:

Two sisters, Mesdames Pauline Saunders and Grace Flippen; three brothers, Charlie, Ulysses and Wiley Mabry and three children, Mesdames Mary Gaither and Inez Woodard and Bernard Mabray.

Baltimore's new citizens discussed

"Baltimore simply has to care a little more and pay a little more attention to people.

"We must realize that we can not renew the city without renewing the people."

The above statements made by Miss Frances Morton, executive director of the Citizens Planning and Housing Association, on Tuesday, briefly form the opinion of community groups concerned with problems presented by "newcomers" to Baltimore.

The "newcomers" specifically are colored citizens who have arrived from rural areas, other states, usually Southern states, and those citizens referred to as "Hillbillies" who have arrived from Southern mountain areas.

How to make the newcomers welcome, at home, and active citizens in the community was the topic of discussion at the regular Community Agency Meeting sponsored by the Social Services Division of City Hospitals and held at the Nurses Home auditorium Tuesday on the hospital campus.

Statistics presented disclosed that the "newcomers" brought up in rural ideals and habits do not adjust to the city and soon become victims of poor health, crime, disease and live in slum areas.

MEMBERS OF the city's various social agencies gathered Tuesday to exchange ideas to understand the problems faced and to decide what may be done to aid the "newcomers" in adjustment.

* * *

DR. IRENE DIGGS, Morgan State college sociology professor, disclosed that the colored rural resident who comes to Baltimore is usually in search of employment.

She said "The most distinguishing feature of the rural colored family is poverty. One's color determines in many respects the occupational role."

Most often, Dr. Diggs added, when the colored rural resident arrives in town he is met with race friction, antagonism, rent exploitation, poor housing and poor health conditions.

She said: "The segregated areas in many large cities of the North assume characteristics of a ghetto with inadequate municipal services, unsatisfactory police protection, crowded and expensive housing.

"... separate churches, restricted use of public recreational facilities, concert halls, theatres, separate washrooms, toilets in public places, exclusion from restaurants and hotels, separate hospital and other health facilities."

CHARGING that the colored citizen is "not wanted" and is not extended a welcome hand into the community, Dr. Diggs said the reaction is often acceptance or resentment by some—hostility, aggression, protest, sullenness, frustration and bitterness by others.

His problems, she said, include competition with whites for employment, lack of education, job training and or experience, opposition of white workers and trade unions, prejudice of employers and their inexperience with colored workers whom they hire only when sheer economic necessity demands it.

Other problems faced by the newcomer who is colored, are failure to be upgraded according to merit, race friction and antagonism in the area of housing, over - evaluation, rent exploitation, poor housing and poor health.

WARD F. PORTER of the U.S. Department of Agriculture, explained that the general attitude of persons, whom he said are popularly termed "Hillbillies", is that they will only be in the city for a short time.

Although many of them remain for a lifetime, they keep thinking they will someday soon return to their mountain homes where habits of living are different from the city.

Accustomed to families with many children, relatives and set ways for generations, their mountain life was confined to informal visiting "kinfolks," attending church meetings, and living in a simple pattern.

With education at low levels and persons rarely educated beyond the 8th grade, the group is unable to follow city patterns and remain difficult to reach, Mr. Ward said.

Moderator for the program was Miss Maxie Rappaport, director of Social Service, Baltimore City Hospitals. Dr. Edmund G. Beacham, chairman, is chief of the hospitals tuberculosis division.

Weather observer on 'Charlie' team

Where's Charlie?

Charlie, an ice floating weather station, which started from the northern-most tip of Alaska, can be found in the Arctic Ocean moving northward at a rate of three miles a day.

This "moving ice bureau's" scientific crew is composed of 12 members of the Air Force and 16 civilians.

Among the recent members of the expedition was William H. Graham who was president of the Douglass High School Class of '55.

WILLIAM GRAHAM

Mr. Graham, 22-year-old weather observer and the only member of his race in the crew of 28, resides at 520 N. Schroeder St. with his mother, Mrs. Minnie Graham.

AFTER finishing Douglass in February of 1955, Mr. Graham joined the Air Force and was discharged in February of this year.

In April he obtained his job with the U.S. Weather Bureau. After a training period, he spent four months on "Charlie" before taking a recent 10 day break at home. He has now been assigned to Wisconsin and after four months there will return to the Arctic region.

The weather expedition, known as Project Ice Skate with "Charlie" as the chief weather, is studying changes in the weather and searching for help in bringing about better forecasts.

Although it is under the U.S. Weather Bureau, it is financed by the Navy and supported by the Air Force. This is the second of two stations — the first having broken up in December.

Mr. Graham, who underwent special instruction, testing and training to qualify for this scientific group, is also interested in photography which is an important part of his work.

SERVICE IS a key word in the Graham family.

Mrs. Minnie Graham, his mother, along with his grandmother, Mrs. Marie Darby, and sister, Martha, provide for homeless children in their Schroeder St. home.

Presently, they have three children — Rene, Bobby and Rodoney.

His brothers are also service minded.

Carl is a member of the Air Force; Joseph is with the Baltimore City police force, Harry is a clerk in the Post Office, and Herbert, who works with a construction company, is a painter.

Another sister, Dorothy, works making Christmas decorations, and a nephew, Robert, a Douglass High student, is interested in painting.

The Grahams are proud of the role William is playing in the project. In such a family, pride and service mean a lot.

Suspected archer held in $3,000 bail

"Your honor because of the serious condition of the victim in the case, the prosecution is asking a postponement until Nov. 16."

Lt. Edwin Lawrence of Western police district, gave this explanation in asking Magistrate Cathan C. Murphy for a continuation of the assault charge against Reginald R. Washington, 20, of the 1900 block of Harlem Ave.

The request was granted and bail was set at $3,000.

Washington was charged with assault and shooting Mrs. Frances Green, 900 block of Bruce St., with a bow and arrow Oct. 24 at her home.

Lt. Lawrence told the magistrate that Washington's attorney, Arthur C. Murphy had surrendered the defendant, at 9:40 Sunday morning, at Western.

A not guilty plea was entered by Washington's attorney.

Magistrate Douglass set the bail at $3,000 and continued the case until Nov. 5.

IN CONNECTION with the case, police report finding Mrs Green with an arrow embedded in her left side, at about 2 a.m. Oct. 24.

She was taken to Franklin Square Hospital where the arrow was removed and her condition is reported as serious.

Mrs. Green told the officers she was shot from the street as she answered a person who called her to the second-floor window.

WITNESSES IN the room at the time, corroborated Mrs. Green's story.

According to the officers Mrs. Green said she had an argument with a friend, earlier in the evening.

The officers said Washington was sought after he was described as a "Hopalong archer."

The officers reported finding leather quiver and several arrows in the basement of Washington's home.

CARE crusade

The eighth annual CARE Food Crusade campaign has been launched in Baltimore and throughout the State.

In a ceremony at city hall, Mayor Grady bought one of the first of what CARE officials hope will be a flood of food parcels for needy families in fifteen countries abroad.

According to the Rev. Bruce H. McDonald, chairman of the Maryland Committee for CARE, the organization this year is attempting to send some 4,000,000 food parcels abroad.

It is hoped Marylanders will underwrite the shipping of 200,000 of these relief packages at a cost of $1 each.

The parcels are made up from government surplus and from foods purchased by CARE to balance the nutritional needs of the countries to which they are sent.

According to Mrs. Robert S. Nyburg, Maryland - Delaware CARE Director, 90,154 food packages were provided by Marylanders last year.

The CARE office is at 1026 Mondawmin Concourse, Baltimore 15, and it is to this address that groups and individuals may send their donations, the Rev. Mr. McDonald added.

NEWS & NOTES

By R. DELACY PETERS

Science predicts many great and startling goodies for the future. One innovation recently announced which is rather interesting to contemplate is the coming use of metal-lined clothing for men and women.

At a recent meeting of the British Assn. for the Advancement of Science, aluminum foil one-quarter of a thousandth of an inch thick was displayed.

The foil is coated on one side of cloth and aside from obvious wearing qualities, the foil is claimed to keep the wearer warm with the metal side inward, and reversed, the wearer would keep cool.

Which reminds me — MUTUAL OF BALTIMORE can design a plan of protection to Savings for you that will tend to cool off the hot tempers that are bound to flare when the occasion arises that one needs money or financial assistance for sickness or accident or the financial emergencies that will plague us in this our life. By properly preparing now these emergencies might be arrested. Ask us about these plans . . . call MU. 5-0624 or come to 2039 W. North Ave. or 407 W. Franklin St.
