Let Us Pray

In effect, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled this week there can no longer be prayer or Bible reading in the public schools.

In our country, church and state are separated by law.

The 1st Amendment forbids the Congress from establishing religious practices.

The 14th Amendment extends that prohibition to the states.

At first thought, we are shocked to think of a public school which is not opened with a morning prayer.

It is downright heathenish.

Why public school kids can not pray, how can Congress or the Supreme Court itself hold prayers every morning?

How can we imprint "In God We Trust" on our currency?

How can we recite the American Creed or sing a hymn in the schools?

STILL, we must confess that a Jewish prayer might offend Catholics, and a Protestant hymn might offend the Muslims, or the agnostics.

This is the very reason the Constitution prohibits the state or the Federal government from setting up any form of religious worship.

We have been violating the constitution since 1789, and that is 173 years.

From now on we must obey the law or change the Constitution.

The Supreme Court does not forbid us from having two minutes of silence at the beginning of the school day.

In those two minutes, each pupil can be taught to pray silently to his God in his own way.

That is not bad for Christians who are directed when you pray, enter into your chamber and the Father who heareth you in secret will reward you openly.

The Republican Plan

The Democratic City Council has refused, so far, to redistrict the city, so the Republicans have come up with a proposal.

Their plan would have the city divided into eight districts, equally populated, with three councilmen each.

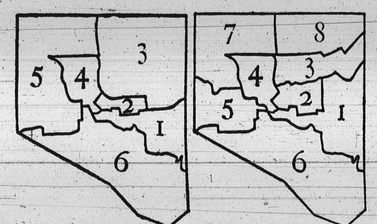
Needed are 10,000 signatures to have a referendum on the proposal in November's general election.

So far, they have 5,000 signatures.

The GOP plan seems equitable, and from what we know of it, we would be inclined to favor it.

The two maps below show how the districts would be set up.

Present



Proposed

The following figures indicate how the districts would be divided.

Present Councilmen	Present Voters*	District	Proposed Councilmen	Proposed Voters*
3	40,588	1	3	48,876
3	30,584	2	3	48,124
4	126,963	3	3	50,047
3	48,988	4	3	48,988
4	105,119	5	3	50,724

Pity, Pity, Pity

A police officer, called to settle a neighborhood dispute, endears himself to all concerned when he soothes ruffled feelings and restores order to the community.

Such was not the case in the 700 block N. Pulaski St. last week.

A mother of four who was carted off to jail alleges she was manhandled by police officers.

Her complaint filed with the NAACP, and her appeal of a probation without verdict ruling by a police magistrate, are now under investigation.

Keeping a neighborhood clean is at best an arduous job. Too often, it is difficult to get city cooperation in removing trash and other debris.

Where a group of clean blockers is working to keep its areas clean, and where there is a dispute among neighborhors, police can do the city a real service if they will treat the disputants as citizens, and not as criminals.

Hose, Hat, Gloves, Tie

We submit that a person who starts out to work in the morning should be properly dressed.

Hose, hat and gloves for women, ties and jackets for men, are proper attire.

Too many young people ignore the fact that the job where they spend an average of 8 hours a day is the most important place they go in a week.

And, of course, job applicants who appear at employment agencies without hose, tie, gloves or hat prejudice the personnel director.

If they do not think enough of the job to dress properly, they are not good employment risks.

We heard of one male job applicant who appeared at a local firm wearing a sports shirt and nondescript shoes.

Knowing he has proper clothes for all occasions, a relative asked why he did not wear them when he went job hunting.

His reply was "I can not wear my good clothes to work. I have to save them for special occasions."

If job hunting is not a special occasion, we don't know what is.

Their Secretaries

If you say "none are" or "who did you bring with you," that is poor English.

But even Presidents sometimes speak poorly. Secretaries have to correct their grammar.

Jack Romagna, stenographer to four Presidents, was fired recently. Mr. Romagna can take shorthand at 240 words a minute. This was good enough for all the other Presidents, but Mr. Kennedy sometimes goes at the rate of 320 words a minute.

Mr. Romagna, out of a job, talked freely about his bosses.

Some Presidents, he said, used singular verbs when they should be plural.

When presidents swear or make uncomplimentary references to women, the secretary cuts them out.

President Truman once called a man a s.o.b. That was eliminated.

Eisenhower became president of a college, but he didn't know the difference between pronouns "I" and "me," and he would say, "Somebody gave Mamie and I a present."

All of this goes to show that Presidents know a lot of things, but their secretaries know still more.

It Can Be Done

If Civil Defense officials want a good example of how fast a public building can be evacuated, we recommend they visit the State Office Building at closing time.

Several minutes after the 4 p.m. quitting time, there is not even a mouse stirring, or at least few mice, perhaps a department head or two.

State Office Building employees are living examples that a large area can be emptied with dispatch.

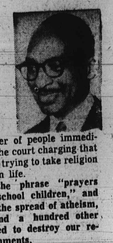
Religion Is A Touchy Issue

By JAMES D. WILLIAMS



Quite early in this business, you learn there are two things you never fool around with — one is the institution of motherhood and the second is religion.

Make a crack about the President, Congress, and/or city officials, and you can walk away unscathed; take a dig, now and then, at some of the more foolish fables of we mortals, and no one will burn you at the stake.

But mention either of the two subjects listed above in a manner that does not agree with the views of your listener, and you've opened a Pandora's box of trouble.

• • •

THE SUBJECTS are so personal that it is next to impossible to hold any critical discussion about them, without arousing someone's emotionalism to white hot heat.

And where emotionalism rules, reason flies out the window.

Perhaps this explains why the Supreme Court's decision this week on a single state written prayer in New York State, has aroused such a maelstrom of discussion — much of it uninformed.

Without even knowing what the decision said, or what it meant, an alarming number of people immediately attacked the court charging that the judges were trying to take religion out of American life.

They heard the phrase "prayers forbidden for school children," and they saw in it, the spread of atheism, communism, and a hundred other "isms" designed to destroy our religious establishments.

A more sober appraisal would have shown that the court decision focused on a narrow issue, and only future cases will determine whether that focus will be widened.

IN TIME, most of us will realize this, but as of now, the Supreme Court is being subjected to the bitterest vilification and attacks it has been forced to endure since it ruled out segregation in public schools.

It comes as no great surprise to find that the leaders of the current anti-Supreme Court movement are those shadowy figures of the far right, who led the pack when the court ruled on schools.

Their campaign to reduce the Supreme Court to a state of impotency has been hampered in the past by the odious nature of the thing they espoused—the continuation of segregation in America.

Now, by hiding behind the religious issue, they can assume the trappings of respectability, though their motives for attacking the court have not changed an iota.

If they are successful in turning public sentiment against the Supreme Court, the apostles of reaction can challenge all the actions the court has taken to strike out segregation.

No one should be deluded into believing that these people are really concerned over whether a prayer is said in a school or not.

The aim, as it has always been, is an emasculation of the powers of the Supreme Court.

UNFORTUNATLEY, TO their banners, these reactionaries have attracted some well intentioned people, who honestly believe that religion is in danger, and the Supreme Court has erred in this instance.

They certainly have a right to their opinion, but because they disagree, is no proof that the court was wrong.

• • •

THE COURT'S decision may not have been universally popular, but since when does a court decision have to be popular, to be the law?

If we say that we will support only those decisions that please us, then how can we complain when some one who does not favor the segregation ruling, announces that he will not support these rulings, because they do not please him?

We can't allow ourselves to be mouse - trapped into a position of supporting some of the decisions of the court, and not supporting others.

If we support one, then we must support them all, whether we like them or not.

Under our system of government, it is the Supreme Court that decides what the law is . . . not you, not I, not the President, or the Congress.

If the Supreme Court has erred, the error will be corrected.

But until then, there can be only one agency charged with the responsibility of interpreting the law, and if we are to protect this democracy, the voice of that agency must be obeyed.

To do it any other way, would be to invite chaos.

Asks Explanation

Dear AFRO:

Your Tuesday edition story on James Brown, now in jail for giving a false tip to police, refers to him as "a frequent and not unusually unreliable tipster to the AFRO."

What do you mean by this? Should the word have been 'a usually unreliable tipster?' — S. L. LACY

(ED. NOTE — A number of tips received by a newspaper, are usually found to be faulty. Mr. Brown supplied the AFRO with a number of tips, many of which proved to have real merit, so that our reporters were willing to follow his leads.)

What Our Readers Say

Happy About Honor

Dear AFRO:

This letter comes to express my surprise as well as my deep gratitude to you and those responsible for selecting me as representative of a group of citizens of the Baltimore community that has made some contribution to its general betterment.

This distinction, as you know only too well, belongs to that larger group of ministers who shared the aims and objectives of this economic thrust, and in togetherness, sought to effect some needful changes in attitudes toward the employment of all segments of the population.

In this, the churches, fraternal, civic and neighborhood organizations, gave immediate assurance that we could expect their fullest cooperation.

We sought to work effectively, but quietly at the task assumed. As our reward, we desired only the opening of more and better job opportunities for an increasingly larger number of our people.

The surface has hardly been scratched. The possibilities are so tremendous as to be staggering.

We are quietly and persistently moving on into several areas, taking them only in what we believe to be manageable units.

On behalf of all the clergymen of the Interdenominational Ministers' Alliance of Baltimore who are united in this venture, I express our gratitude for the encouragement, support and recognition you have given our endeavors.

Rev. FRANK L. WILLIAMS

(ED. NOTE —The Interdenominational Ministerial Alliance of which the Rev. Mr. Williams is president was named to the 1961 AFRO Honor Roll, for its efforts, through a "selective patronage movement," to increase job opportunities for colored persons.)

Criticizes Court

Dear AFRO:

Let's face it. The Supreme Bench made a real goof this time.

It's not that it didn't have the right idea. I would be the first to agree that government and religion should be separate and apart, but life just doesn't work that way.

You can separate government and religion in terms of one superseding or controlling the other. But you can't separate the two in terms of incidental influences.

You can, for instance, say that the church cannot dictate to Congress what laws should be passed, or to the President on his foreign policy.

You can also say that Congress cannot decide which religion should be allowed to practice in this country, or that the President cannot pass an executive ordinance making his religion the religion of the land.

But you can't say that religion has no place in a schoolroom, when it happens to be only a pale reflection of the ideals on which the teachings are founded.

Before you correct me, let me point out that I'm well aware of the fact that the court did not explicitly say this.

All it said was that the state of New York had no right to dictate an establishment of religion within a secular framework.

But, again let's be realistic. The words and decisions of the high court are, and always have been, subject to the broadest range of interpretations. And the implications in this instance, rightly or wrongly, are agonizingly clear.

F. H.

Stop Criticizing

Dear AFRO:

Help, help, help. Everywhere we look we can see the need for it. There is so much heartache and troubles all over and the aged, the young and the very young feel it most of all.

And don't know what to do about it. So I am wondering too, what can we do?

By we, I mean the fraternal, the social and religious organizations and all who care. Let's stop criticizing and do something constructive to help, and in the meantime saying in our hearts that could be me, or my loved ones.

No Tears For Earl

Dear AFRO:

We should not bemoan the sale of Earl Robinson to the Rochester Redwings as leaving the Baltimore Orioles without a colored player — the only team in the majors without one, as a matter of fact.

The time of race ball — backing a team only because it has colored players — has passed, it seems to me.

True, colored baseball players have made their mark in the majors. Look at the leading contenders in both leagues, Willie Mays, Vada Pinson, Felipe Alou, Tommy Davis, Frank Robinson, Orlanda Cepeda, Earl Battey and Elston Howard.

Earl Robinson, sad to say, was not in this select group. He, like so many others, failed to live up to his potential in the majors.

Earl's main trouble was hitting. He never really developed into the power hitter it was hoped he would.

His fielding had improved greatly since he came to the club, and there was no question that he was the fastest man on the team.

But an injury to his elbow made it difficult and very painful for him to throw the ball.

In recent trips to the plate as a pinch-hitter, Earl hit line drive singles and got on base in crucial situations.

But Gus Triandos, first string catcher, out for a month with an injured thumb, was placed back on the active list, which brought the roster to one more than the limit. Somebody had to go.

We wish Robinson well, and hope that he might someday return to the Orioles or to some other major league team and play the calibre of baseball that we all know he is capable of.

JOHN SCOTT

Clarification Given

Dear AFRO:

In your story on James Brown, he is referred to as "Eagle Eye." Would you tell me what the term means?

(ED NOTE —In 1957, in an interview with the AFRO, Mr. Brown told how he was gifted with two "extra bright eyes," which enabled him to be an amateur private detective. He related several of the cases in which he had helped the police. Because of his skill at uncovering news stories, the term "Eagle Eye" was one of tribute.)

Have You Been To The Theatre Lately?

By ROBERT W. MATTHEWS

Chanced to watch the "Bowl" awards on television last Sunday. 'Twas interesting enough but not much different from the Emmy, Grammy, Oscar and all the rest of the award presentations.

In last Tuesday's AFRO Magazine Section, the front page story featured a visit with Diahann Carroll.

Began wondering how many readers know that Diahann copped a top award this year.

Her performance in the Broadway musical "No Strings" won the Critics Award for "best performance femme lead in a musical."

In case you might not know, the Critics Award is to the legitimate theatre what the Oscar Award is to motion pictures.

• • •

A GLANCE through the records shows that Lena Horne won the identical award in 1958 for her performance in "Jamaica." Lorraine Hansberry won the "most promising playwright" award in 1959 for "Raisin in the Sun."

All this merely served to set up another chain of thought. Why do we stay away in droves from performances of legitimate theatre? It wasn't too hard to figure out the answer.

Outside of the fact that it is necessary to travel to New York to see the original productions, admission tickets are scaled to about $9.20 each.

Even the road - show productions carry ticket prices of $2.50 to $6.00.

But despite the cost, a live performance in a theatre or tent is an unequaled experience in entertainment. If you have never been to the theater, by all means make an effort to do so.

EVERY NOW and again, kinda like to check the Top Ten tunes in countries around the world. Have been watching with interest the spread of the Twist.

Find that almost every country has a Twist record in the Top Ten. In Israel, "Twist Twist Senora" is No. 10. "Let's Twist Again" is No. 4 in Brazil, No. 7 in Holland, No. 6 in Belgium, No. 9 in Japan, No. 7 in Norway, No. 2 in Iceland and "Florida Twist," is No. 3 in Mexico.

AFRO Credo

A newspaper succeeds because its management believes in itself, in God and in the present generation. It must always ask itself:

Whether it has kept the faith with the common people.

Whether it has no other goal except to see that their liberties are preserved and their future assured.

Whether it is fighting to get rid of shams, to provide jobs for everybody;

Whether it stays out of politics except to expose corruption and condemn injustice, race prejudice or compromise.

Is Baltimore Water Really That Good?

By GEORGE W. COLLINS

A newcomer to Baltimore will hardly spend much time before hearing glowing praises of the virtues of Baltimore's water.

As the saying goes, anyone plagued with wonderlust has only to quench his thirst with a drink of local water and his (or her) roaming days are over.

Heretofore, I never gave the idea more than casual thought, choosing, instead, to write it off as just another item in the city's vast reservoir of amusing folklore.

Now I'm not so sure.

This chain of thought follows in the wake of the exploits of "Eager Ernie," which also recall the feat of one Tunnel Joe nearly a dozen years ago.

• • •

IN LEAPING over the 35 - foot wall to escape from City Jail, "Eager Ernie," displayed a type of daring that would make a hardened paratrooper shudder in disbelief.

When Tunnel Joe risked his life to dig a 70-foot tunnel under the wall of the Maryland Penitentiary in the dead of night to make good his escape, he earned a place among the stout-hearted.

He showed a determination and skill few of us will ever be accused of having.

Yet the manner in which both were recaptured smacks of carelessness.

Or does it?

"Eager Ernie," after five days of freedom, was captured in the 1200 block of Mosher St. — five blocks from Western District Police station, center of the dragnet out for him.

Tunnel Joe was captured at a bowling alley in the 600 block N. Howard St. — nine blocks from where he had burrowed his way to freedom.

• • •

HE RETURNED to Baltimore after visiting several other states.

Why didn't "Eager Ernie" leave town?

Why didn't Tunnel Joe stay away after leaving?

Maybe the thought of not being able to get Baltimore water was too much!

Miss Carolyn Jeanette May, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Melvin E. Smith Sr. (Jeanette Day), leaves July 7 for summer study in Salzburg, Austria.

She is an honor junior at Morgan State College, and a 1961 deb, presented at the Me-De-So Cotillion.

Miss May was selected by Morgan's German Department, to study the language at the Salzburg U., along with five other U.S. students.

While in Austria, she will attend the Salzburg Summer Festival, tour Munich and Vienna before returning home.

Miss May, by the way, is the granddaughter of Baltimore's beloved Mrs. Ethel J. Day, longtime Coppin secretary, and William Day the veteran employment firm owner.

Here from Phoenix, Arizona, where he is a school social worker, is Elder Russell. It is his first visit home since 1957.

He is "roughing it up" on the East Coast, through Canada and making a leisurely return trip to Phoenix camping at state forests, etc.

Fourteen - year - old Linda Lewis, a June graduate of Lemmel Junior High, flew over to Paris last week, to spend the summer with her uncle and aunt, Capt. and Mrs. Norman Parker (Eugenia).

She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Archie Lewis (Ruth).

• • •

Travel right here in the U.S. can be exciting, particularly if you are in the ninth grade, and if you have an enterprising teacher like Mrs. Carrie D. Scott.

She took 29 of her Cherry Hill Junior High pupils to New York for a weekend. Word from the Big City is that the girls "looked sharp" and the boys were "really togged."

But most important, it was a first trip away from home for most of the youngsters, who had the feeling for the first time, of being 'real Americans,' for the first time.

Of course, they saw Radio City, Empire State, Hayden Planetarium, Statue of Liberty, made a tour of Manhattan, and had the thrill of hearing that wonderful organ at the Cathedral of the Church St. John.

The lucky youngsters who made the trip were:

Dickey Norfleet, Celestine Bazemore, Jeanette Howard, Barbara Roberts, Gwendolyn Cole, Russel Chesley, Marilyn Graham, Elizabeth Allen, Beverly Briggs, Panthea Wilson, Mary Williams, Leola Daniels.

And, Mae Etta Lee, Julia Warfield, Merita Smith, Jean Harris, Patricia Tinsley, Gwendolyn Allen, Veda Wainwright, Patricia Jones, Billie Wilder, Bailey, Jonathan Prather.

Also, Albert Stevenson, James Pearson, Julius Murrien, and William Jackson. Chaperones were Misses Lena Woods and Peggy Riddick.

Miss Vondelear Haggins, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Mayo Haggins, 514 Robert St. and niece of Miss Wahseeola Male, Mrs. Frances Vessells and the newly wed Mrs. Robinette Williams Newton, has been here for the past month.

She is a public health nurse in New Mexico, made the 2,900-mile drive here alone with her dog, Shep, a full blooded, 1 yr-18 months collie, who rode in the back seat in his cage like a veteran.

Miss Haggins is beginning her second year on the job aiding blind children of the Navajo Hopi and Apache Indian tribes and just love it.

A 1948 Douglass graduate, Miss Haggins studied two years at Morgan, finished St. Phillips Medical College of Virginia in Richmond.

From 1958 to 1959, she was with the Baltimore City Health Department.

Miss Haggins left Baltimore on Monday, will be on her job by the time you read this.

Before returning, she witnessed the wedding of her aunt, Robinette and Harry Newton, Saturday at noon at St. Cecelia's.

"Twas a grand and glorious day on Sunday at the Dundalk waterfront home of Dr. and Mrs. Joseph Thomas.

Members of the Neptune Yacht Club and approximately 200 guests were there for the club's annual flag-raising exercises.

There were 15 yachts of all sizes and colors.

Outstanding were those owned by Washington yachtsmen.

Their craft were decorated with wall-to-wall carpeting, unit kitchens, twin-band television and hi-fi sets.

Neptune Commodore Elroy Wilson presided at the exercises. He was assisted by Charles Randall, commodore of the Seafarers' Club of D. C., and Carl White former commodore of the Baltimore club.

First cruise of the season is July 8, when they go to Solomon's Island. In August, the group cruises to Atlantic City, where members will be guests at the Golden Key Yacht Club.

A true story:—

We spied the unhappiest little fellow we have seen in many a moon on Monday morning at the Greyhound Bus Terminal.

He was about nine, had blond hair, blue eyes. His luggage said he was from Laurel, Md.

He was seated on the bus bound for the YMCA's Camp Mohawk. Also on the bus, a number of other youngsters going to the samp camp.

Shortly before the bus pulled out, a woman entered the bus, instructed the blonde youth to get off, collected his luggage, and asked for and received the refund of camp fees.

He was nearly in tears. "But why can't I go?" he asked the woman.

To him, it was not important that his fellow campers had brown skins. Ho hum!

Love that Kennedy man—Attorney - General Robert that is.

He really knows how to make people at home in his presence.

He was in Baltimore on Friday to address the banquet meeting of the National Newspaper Publishers Association at Morgan.

From the time he left his open car outside the Morgan Refectory, until he joined his wife and children for the return trip, the Kennedy charm was in action.

First off he has a firm, warm handshake.

Secondly, he looks you straight in the eye when you speak to him.

• • •

When the presiding officer suggested that he would have to leave after his talk, he said in no uncertain terms, "Oh no, I'm in no hurry, my wife happens to think the the children should get in bed at a decent hour."

(His wife and children came to the banquet after he arrived. They had gotten lost on their way to the college).

Mr. Kennedy had a prepared speech, but he did not appear to use it. In fact, it appeared he talked extemporaneously.

People who are sincere, and familiar with their subject can do this with ease.

His subject was civil rights, and he talked it like he meant it.

• • •

Nicest gesture: As he left the banquet room, he circulated among the 400 guests, shook hands, and stopped to greet caterers who prepared the food.

He was at the door about to leave, when he sprinted clear back to the head table to say "goodbye" to the AFRO's Carl Murphy!!

And he is just like most fathers.

He does not know offhand of their ages.

As he started to name them he got mixed up.

The audience howled. He did too!

Love those Arena Players too. We watched them put on a one-act comedy, Kaufman's 'Still Alarm,' at Carnation's luncheon for women publishers.

Very, very funny characters were portrayed by Joseph Wilson, Marcus Wood, Samuel Wilson, Irving Turner and Gordon Stills.

And, very entertaining too were those Douglass High faculty members who sang and played tunes from 'South Pacific,' Mrs. Marion Smith, head of the school's music department; Mrs. Lois Wright and William Grigsby.

Our friend, Dr. Mark Hollander is spending the summer in Denmark, Paris and London, studying advanced techniques in superficial radiotherapy as applied to dermatologic (skin) problems. He is instructor in dermatology at Hopkins.

Which reminds me to mention that our news contact at Hopkins, William A. Miller Jr., director of public relations, is on leave until fall.

He is serving as consultant with the Office of Volunteers of the Peace Corps.

• • •

And, that brings another thought to mind. A story in this newspaper on Tuesday quotes President Kennedy as saying that the Peace Corps 'wants everybody'.

The President quashed reports that colored Am€ricans were being discouraged from joining. He told a committee that colored youth who join the Peace Corps would be serving their country and their people in the best sense of the word. . . "

So there!! Go right on over to D.C. and join up, if you're interested.

• • •

Thoughtful gesture: Even though she lost her race for nomination to the House of Delegates from the Fifth District, Mrs. Victorine (Vic) Adams, has not forgotten those who helped her.

On Monday morning at Wilson's she has invited members of the clergy to breakfast, 'in grateful recognition and appreciation of their unusual and effective political action project."

Isn't that a thoughtful gesture!!

Cheery cards to Carroll Woodford, the 15-year-old City College student.

He is spending his second summer in the hospital (Kernan Hospital).

Remember last summer when he broke his hip, he was in a cast for 12 weeks? This summer, doctors have operated again. Bethel AME Church, is preparing for a trip to Russia this fall.

She will sing with the Robert Shaw Chorale. She is a soprano, attended the Oberlin Conservatory of Music, where she earned her bachelor's in music this month. She studied there on Deiches and Oberlin College scholarships $8,000.

She has also studied at Peabody Preparatory School here in Baltimore, where she also finished high school (Eastern), with honors.

For the Robert Shaw trip, she was among 23 selected from a group of 500 who auditioned early this year. The trip is under the auspices of the State Department's international cultural exchange program.

This will be Hazel's second trip abroad. In 1960-61, she studied during her junior year at Oberlin in Austria at the Mozarteum School of Music.

Young people doing things: Twenty-two-year-old Hazel Bryant, daughter of the talented daughters of the Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Harrison J. Bryant (Bethel AME Church), is preparing for a trip to Russia this fall.
