Surrender Of German Navy Has No Precedent In History

There is not a fighting seaman alive—other than a German—who will not insist from the bottom of his soul that the German Navy should have come out and fought until the North Sea closed over them. American ships, British ships, French ships, Italian ships, all would have done it. Nothing in all naval history furnishes a precedent for this abject and ignominous surrender. Even Persians fought gallantly at Salamis and the resistance of Mark Anthony's vagrants, as drivers, reapers and boys afloat for the first time at Actium was magnificently desperate.

This is what happens to a navy without traditions, a machine made navy itself a machine, a navy of yesterday, for it is less than half as old as our own, and of mushroom growth, besides the "wooden walls of England" which for eight centuries have defined the "freedom of the seas," a navy with none of the inspiration which comes from the great names of Nelson, Suffren and Farragut.

"Indeed he (Themistocles) first ventured to tell them they should apply to the sea and then immediately assisted them in acquiring the empire of it—Thucydides Lib. 1, chap. xciii.

"Pericles, the son of Xanthippus, came forward and gave the following counsel: 'Of vast consequence indeed is the dominion of the sea; for consider had we been islanders who would have been less open to attack than ourselves?'" Ibid. Lib. 1, chap. xliii.

More than a score of centuries later that counsel defeated the German navy.

TELLING IT IN CONFIDENCE

Enjoining Secrecy Is Good Way to Revive Lagging Attention, but Sometimes It Is Dangerous.

When you are talking to a man and when his interest in what you are saying begins to lag, a good way to resuscitate him is to lean forward and say: "What I am going to tell you is in the strictest confidence. You must not breathe a word of it." Ordinarily one who has that said to him will wake up and pay attention to your conversation—at least for a while. What you have really done when you say that to a man is this: You have prevented him from going to sleep on your hands, you have stirred his curiosity, you have advertised!

As a scheme for stimulating interest in your line of talk it is all right. But if what you then proceed to tell him is something that you really want to have kept secret, the plan is a poor one. If you have information that you don't want people to spread around—keep it to yourself, says "Sid" in the American Magazine.

The trouble with a human being who hears a thing in confidence is often this—he can't remember that he heard it in confidence. He remembers the item of news providing it is juicy enough, but the fact that he heard it in confidence is a little like handing a man a jewel in an envelope and at the same time warning him to take as good care of the envelope as he takes of the jewel. Everything goes all right for a while. But by and by the envelope wears out. It is a flimsy sort of thing anyway. And so there comes a time when the envelope, having grown thin and weak and frayed at the edges, slips off or is cast off, and nothing remains but the jewel.

How did I acquire all this wisdom on the subject of confidential communications? I will tell you. I acquired it recently in the school of experience. About three months ago I told something in strict confidence to a friend—a man of the highest character, one who would not injure me intentionally for the world. But—and this is what gave me a jar—he went and lost the green envelope, for yesterday he called at my office, carefully closed the door, drew his chair near to mine and in a low voice told me in "strictest confidence" exactly the same thing that I told him!
