Fingerprints, gun to be main Evers murder case evidence

JACKSON, Miss. — "Let's face it. A fingerprint is a fingerprint and a gun is a gun. We have done the best we could, we will try all the harder this time."

This grim reply to a reporter's question was given by Hines County District Attorney William L. Waller who is trying for a second time the White Citizens Councils member accused of killing Medgar Evers, NAACP field secretary.

The defendant is Byron De La Beckwith, 43, salesman from Greenwood, cotton center of the Mississippi Delta.

* * *

THE STATE IS SEEKING a first - degree murder conviction, which carries a penalty of death in the electric chair.

The trial is being heard before Judge Leon F. Hendrick, who presided at the first Beckwith trial which ended with a hung jury last February.

The State began calling prosecution witnesses on Thursday morning.

PICKING OF THE all white jury for the second trial of Beckwith was completed late Wednesday night. The task required three days and a night session.

A number of the prospective jurors questioned were dismissed after they admitted they would not be able to vote to convict a white man accused of killing a colored man, no matter what evidence was presented.

A Jackson textile worker was dismissed after he said he would be fearful for the safety of his daughter if he voted to acquit Beckwith.

THE MAN, J. A. Broome, said he has a daughter teaching an integrated class in Chicago. He said he had read in newspapers that teachers in Chicago have been beaten.

The defense of Beckwith is being directed by Hugh Cunningham, law partner of former Mississippi Governor Ross Barnett.

Cunningham was associated with the first trial of Beckwith, but formally took charge of the case on Tuesday after the prosecution announced that it accepted a panel of 12 white men to hear the case.

Four of the men subsequently were challenged by the defense and had to be replaced.

EVERS, A VETERAN of World War 2, was shot from ambush the night of last June 12.

FBI agents arrested Beckwith a few days after the murder. The Federal agency turned over to state authorities evidence used to link Beckwith to the crime.

They traced ownership of the gun, found at the murder scene, to Beckwith. Fingerprints identified as those of Beckwith were found on the gun.

When shot in the back, Evers was returning home after attending a civil rights rally sponsored by the NAACP.

Special cop held for the grand jury

Ellsworth D. Morris, a special patrolman of the National Detective Bureau charged with fatally shooting a 21-year-old accused shoplifter Feb. 1, was ordered held for action of the grand jury in homicide Court Tuesday.

Judge T. Barton Harrington, presiding at the hearing in giving his decision stated, "This is a very close case."

Mr. Morris, of the 500 block N. Franklintown Rd., is accused of having shot William O. Elbeck, of the 500 block W. Lafayette Ave., during a struggle after he allegedly attempted to apprehend the man when he observed him taking stockings from the counter and putting them under his coat.

The special officer said when he approached the man and told him to return the stockings, the man refused.

He said a scuffle ensued during which the man grabbed his night stick and began striking at him.

Mr. Morris said he was forced to shoot the man to protect himself. He is free under a $3,000 bail bond.

AWARD WINNER Dr. Percy V. Williams, supervisor of pupil services, State Department of Education, is one of 3 Marylanders among 173 teachers and 85 school administrators awarded John Hay Summer Fellowships. Dr. Williams will study at the University of Oregon.

CORE definitely will picket World's Fair

Baltimore CORE will have the help of 11 affiliated chapters for its demonstrations at the Maryland pavilion when the World's Fair opens in New York on April 22.

William S. Bush, chairman of Baltimore CORE's New York World's Fair Committee, reported Wednesday that the plan to picket the Maryland restaurant had been approved by national CORE and that 11 New York-area CORE units would be taking part in the demonstrations.

Originally Baltimore CORE planned the World's Fair protest to dramatize Maryland's failure to pass state-wide public accomodations laws. Since the General Assembly enacted a law covering all Maryland counties last month, CORE voted to continue the World Fair protest because "a move is being made to bring the (public accommodations) lawto a referendum vote by obtaining 22,000 signatures of voters on a petition."

Veterinarian's wife granted divorce

Charging that her husband, Dr. Charles N. Saunders misconducted himself with a Mrs. Marie Taylor, Mrs. Joan W. Saunders divorced him, here, recently.

Mrs. Saunders waived alimony, but retained custody of their three children and an order for $40 per week for support of the children.

She said that she and the children are now living with her brother and sister-in-law, Dr. and Mrs. Malbour L. Watson of Trappe, Md.

Mrs. Saunders filed the petition for divorce on November 30, 1963. She said that she had ceased to live with the veternarian shortly before when she had discovered letters and bills in his office on Liberty Heights Ave. which indicated the friendship between him and Mrs. Taylor.

She said that she questioned Dr. Saunders and he admitted intimacies with the woman. Her brother, Dr. Watson, also said that Dr. Saunders admitted the friendship to him.

Grafton M. Williams, who worked in Dr. Saunders' animal hospital, said that he rented an apartment on Mount Royal Terrace which the Doctor and Mrs. Taylor often visited and on occasions staved overnight.

On such occasions, Mr. Williams said, he stayed with his grandmother.

Dr. Watson testified that in February, 1963, his sister called him and asked him to come to her home. He said that he found her and the children without food and that electricity and the telephone had been cut off.

Along with the $40 per month for the children, two sons, 5 and 2 years old, and a daughter, 7 months old, Dr. Saunders has been ordered by the court to clear up indebtedness amounting to $7,021.58, which might involve Mrs. Saunders.

Candidate gives dental pain cure

Dr. Sylvan M. Shane, Republican candidate for Congress from the Seventh District, announced a method of alleviating dental fear and pain, in an address to dentists of the city Wednesday evenings at the Sheraton Belvedere Hotel.

Dr. Shane said his method utilized a combination of two drugs, nisentil and brevital, which produces amnesia in combination with local anesthesia to eliminate pain.

Prior to administering the drugs intravenously, the patient is verbally conditioned as are patients undergoing hypnotism, he stated.

Muggers, yokers face hard times

Would - be muggers and yokers are in for hard times.

This, essentially, is the net result of an opinion rendered Tuesday by Circuit Court Judge Wilson K. Barnes, who overruled Police Commissioner Bernard J. Schmidt.

Judge Barnes ruled that Commissioner Schmidt "had no authority to ban sale of tear gas pens designed as a defense weapon for women.

The weapon, which fires tear gas pellets in the face of assailants, rendering them helpless for approximately 30 minutes, was called a deadly and dangerous weapon by the commissioner, who instructed policemen to halt its sale to the public.

JUDGE BARNES found that the device is not a deadly weapon under terms of criminal statue and held that the commissioner has no authority to prevent its sale.

During a hearing on the brought by manufacturers of petition brought by manufacturers of the device, police officials testified that it could be convered into a deadly weapon, although they conceded it would damage the hands of the user if it were converted.

No testimony was given on the possibility of yokers and muggers using the device to render their intended victim helpless.

Teen missing

Mrs. Susie Lee Hutchins, 213 N. Bruce St., reports that her daughter, Noveryne Dirton, 15, has been missing since Friday. She reportedly left home for a movie and never returned.

An eighth grade student at School 176, when last seen the teen-ager was wearing a dark green coat and two-tone brown shoes.

Murrays at war with School Board again

Mrs. Madalyn Murray, the atheist housewife, her two school - age sons and the Baltimore School Board are about to go to legal war again.

Mrs. Murray's last fight with public schools ended in a Supreme Court decision banning classroom prayer.

However, the school board yesterday voted to keep the words "under God" in the Pledge of Allegiance, said each day in Baltimore classrooms.

On April 3, Mrs. Murray forwarded a written request to the board asking that the pledge's wording be changed.

Her reason was that "We find this to be offensive to our individual liberties and to our freedom of conscience, since we are atheists.

"We also believe that it is an unconstitutional practice which violates the principles of separation of church and state, guaranteed by the First Amendment of the Constitution of the United States."

* * *

MRS. MURRAY added that in her opinion, "This is not a Christian nation. In fact 70 million persons in America neither attend church or belong to any church. Of the remaining 110 million churchgoers their erractic attendance and non - concern is a scandal. . . ."

Dr. William McElroy, presiding for absent board president Eli M. Frank Jr., swiftly chaired the controversial Murray letter through the board meeting.

He quickly asked the rest of the board to act on Dr. George B. Brain's suggestion, that Mrs. Murray's request had no legal foundation.

The six board members present voted to keep the pledge of allegiance language as it is.

In giving the historical genesis of the pledge Dr. Brain pointed out that in 1954 the pledge was amended by an act of congress to include "under God" in its wording.

Dr. Brain also said the board had no authority to alter this language and cited state and congressional rulings which were of higher authority.

* * *

"NO ISSUE has precipitated the emotions released by this request" the superintendent commented. He said his office has received many phone calls and letters from all the world.

Although the Murray request was expected to stir up a tempest the regular school board meeting was over in 20 minutes and a battery of TV newsreel cameramen had nothing exciting to film.

'Skill Bank' project set by Urban League

Nudged by the "mood of the time," the Baltimore Urban League, in concert with the national body, will begin April 20 to recruit potential and unemployed skilled workers for its "Skills Bank Program."

The program is designed to:

1. Locate people who have skills for sale.

2. Find jobs in government, business industry, labor and education which can utilize these skills.

Earl C. Pyle, associate director of vocational services for the local League Branch, said the effort to compile a bank of colored talent in Baltimore will begin through selected centers throughout the city.

The national office will send out field workers to cooperate with local chapters in the search for unsed skilled workers who are not filling "rewarding jobs" due to lack of opportunities.

Teams of Job experts from the League will visit high schools, colleges, training centers and other community agencies to supply the skill bank.

* * *

EMPLOYERS in all corners of the labor market will be surveyed to determine what jobs are available that can be filled by talents in the skill bank, Mahlon T. Puryear project director, said.

Skilled workers whose talents can't be utilized locally will be referred to the national bank where they will be considered for employment opportunities on a nationwide basis, Mr. Puryear said.

By creating a reservoir of skilled colored workers the minorities in taking advantage of job opportunities resulting from a review of present hiring practices regarding the use of non-white workers by industry, labor, business and other professions.

Further information on the location of centers, procedures, and other pertinent facts of the projected should be directed to Mr. Pyle at the League office, 2404 Pennsylvania Ave., Telephone LAfayette 3-0706.

Democrats 4th District to fight Wallace

A group of politically motivated citizens endorsed a block-by-block voter registration campaign to defeat Gov. George Wallace in the Maryland primary May 19.

Each of the 200 persons attending the meeting, a political workshop sponsored by the Fourth District Democratic organization, agreed to get 10 voters in his block to vote for Sen. Daniel Brewster who is opposing the Alabama governor in the primary. They will begin the appeal for votes tomorrow (Saturday).

The group took the action after a heated discussion on the signifiance of Wallace's surprise showing in the Wisconsin primary Tuesday. The arch-segregationist got more than 261,000 voters.

TROY BRAILEY, local labor leader and member of the Fourth District club, told the group Governor Wallace's showing in Wisconsin should serve to awaken voters to what can happen when apathy reigns.

He said Baltimoreans must work hard to get out the vote if they do not want to be embarrassed by a good Wallace showing.

State Senator Verda Welcome told the group that Wallace's showing could result in Congress relaxing its efforts because of the effect passage of the civil rights bill might have in lawmakers' home electorates.

The workshop is a series of six conducted by the Morgan State College Institute for Political Education.

County CORE wants to pin Agnew down

Baltimore County CORE on Thursday requested a meeting April 18 with Spiro T. Agnew, Baltimore county executive, to discuss the failure of the County Council to pass public accommodations and open occupancy legislation.

LaRoy M. Dyson, CORE chairman, said: "In view Mr. Agnews recent declaration that he does not intend to introduce a public accommodations law in the County Council, CORE deems it necessary to make clear that such 'slowing down' tactics can only lead to demonstrations of Gwynn Oak proportions in the months to come."

Dyson noted that "under the 'implied powers' provision of the charter the County Council can act now."

He added: "We will not wait, as Mr. Agnew intends to do, until the Supreme Court rules on the State Trespass Act and the Congress passes Federal legislation; we want our freedom and we want it now."

No confirmation for CORE's request for a conference with Agnew came (as of Friday) from the County Executive's office.

Mrs. Young burned in home accident

Mrs. Gerladine Young wife of Claude (Buddy) Young, 3206 Vickers Rd., is convalescing from serious burns sustained in a kitchen accident last week.

The housewife said a pot of boiling hot water spilled on her legs when it toppled off the edge of the sink. "It look like a mummy about the legs," she said jokingly while telling of her second degree burns.

Mrs. Young was treated by a private physician and ordered off her feet. She is now able to walk, but with some difficulty she reports.
