the challenge

Develop space and life systems, dealing effectively with the problems of heat rejection, atmospheric constituent supply, contaminant removal, humidity and pressure control, and water and waste management.

the company

Hamilton Standard furnishes technical leadership to government, science and industry on some of the nation's most important projects. Here is the ideal synthesis of facilities, technical talent and product diversification ... located in the highly desirable central Connecticut area.

the men

Attractive opportunities now exist in our Space and Life Systems Department for men qualified by experience to work on a number of advanced projects. Current openings include:

DESIGN ENGINEERS—with background in mechanical design of rotating machinery, hydraulic and/or pneumatic valves. Should have experience in structural and thermodynamic analysis and be able to establish schematics and trade-off studies for life support systems.

ANALYTICAL ENGINEERS—to work on advanced analysis of space life support systems involving thermodynamics, fluid flow, solid mechanics and heat transfer.

PRELIMINARY DESIGN ENGINEERS—to conduct preliminary design and studies in the field of life support systems including related vehicle and crew equipment. Must be able to prepare and present effective new product technical proposals.

To apply for the above or other openings, please write in confidence (stating present salary) to Mr. H. O. Wakeman, Hamilton Standard, Windsor Locks, Connecticut—an equal opportunity employer.
