office with a lame-duck Council, before election with the present City Council which has eight new members among the 20 councilmen.

His Accomplishments

1. Introduced and pushed for eventual passage of the councilmanic redistricting plan, more commonly identified as a variation of Plan X.

This was done while the lame-duck Council was still in office.

2. Introduced and pushed for passage of Mayor McKeldin's civil rights ordinance.

3. Supported tax relief ordinance for aged (introduced by Leon A. Rubenstein 5th-D, and just passed this week).

4. Created special City Council Committee to investigate crime in the city.

5. Created special committee for mass transportation, to help solve problem of providing more adequate transit service for Baltimore.

6. Introduced plan now being studied for City Council establishment of a youth employment project, to furnish jobs for 500 students during the summer months.

7. Advocated enactment of a program for more small parks for the entire city, and more low rent homes along the lines of the Murphy Housing Project, to provide housing for the elderly, both of which are under development.

His Goals

1. Creation of a program to make the summer weeks productive for the 200,000 youths out of school during that period.

2. Realization of a youth employment project, a conservation program on a year-around basis, where school drop-outs and others can learn practical trades and skills needed for gainful employment.

3. Determination made of public versus mass transit service, and the feasibility of a metropolitan authority for water, sewerage, sanitation, police and fire protection.

4. Whether to continue city financing of Friendship Airport, or turn it over to the state.

5. A more equitable tax to relieve the property owner.

Expanding Colored Population

"The increase in the colored population here," Mr. D'Alesandro said, "is certainly going to necessitate more job opportunities for this segment of our citizens."

"This is the crux of the plight now of some of our colored citizens. Many of them are willing and able to work, but none is available for them.

"I think also since a large portion of the colored community is unskilled, it is going to be necessary for the city, state and national government to cooperate in a vocational program for these people.

"Increased job opportunities is the crux of what must come with this expanding population."

Comment

The youthful Mr. D'Alesandro is far from a stranger to politics, having cut his eye teeth on the precinct level with the organization of his father, Thomas D'Alesandro Jr., long-time mayor here.

He is about as well liked generally by his colleagues, as this present Council is capable of liking a president.

He exerted an early control, by relegating members of the Pollack faction and some of the Third District councilmen who did not see eye to eye with him to minor committee assignments.

His control, however, was not such he could muster sufficient support for any housing provisions of Mayor McKeldin's omnibus civil rights bill.

HE DREW much public criticism, also, for pushing the councilmanic redistricting legislation through the lame-duck Council.

This has since come back to plague him.

Now he is unable to garner sufficient Council interest to have serious consideration of having the legislative redistricting plan approved by the General Assembly adopted instead for the new councilmanic districts.

Mr. D'Alesandro, however, proved to be a friend of the colored community when as president of the Board of Supervisors of Elections he cooperated greatly to aid voter registration.

His interest in this segment of his constituents, his sympathetic awareness of their particular problems appears still to be high.

Phila. press hits Chester cops action

CHESTER, Pa. — (UPI) — "Almost inconceivable" and "a shocking demonstration in incompetance and irresponsibility."

This was how the Philadelphia Press Association described the action of Chester police as 212 persons were arrested here, Wednesday night during civil rights demonstrations.

Many of the demonstrators were severely beaten.

The Philadelphia Press Association protested in a telegram to Mayor James H. Gorbey at the treatment of a Philadelphia evening bulletin reporter who was beaten up by police and arrested during demonstrations before the home of McClure, county republican leader.

THE ASSOCIATION said the treatment of Timothy Tyler was "almost inconceivable" and protested the beating as shocking.

At least 212 persons were arrested and confined to the Delaware County prison and a temporary jail set up in a garage behind the county courthouse at Media.

The demonstrators blocked both entrances to the school administration building, blocked streets around the McClure home, and circled the police station chanting "Freedom Now."

THE LEADERS planned to march on the police station and the Chester School board administration office.

Meanwhile the office of the assistant superintendent of schools announced that the Chester High School would be scheduled tentatively to reopen Monday.

All the city's schools were ordered closed Thursday because of the possibility of violence stemming from protests against de facto segregation in the schools.

The office also said that if conditions warrant the city's 13 other schools would reopen Tuesday. There are 11,000 pupils in the city schools.

success of the protests. Percy Gilmere, an official of the Brooklyn chapter of CORE, said, "This is the end. Our backs are broken." This city is worse than Birmingham."

Bayard Rustin, organizer of the March on Washington last summer.

He said plans were underway to "unseat the Mississippi delegation" at the convention and if this does not succeed "then I think we have a moral obligation to go into the Democratic convention and disrupt it."

He did not indicate what form the "disruption" would take.

FIVE COURTS in Queens were kept open Wednesday night for arraignment of scores of civil rights demonstrators arrested at the World's Fair opening.

Jurists required bail in almost every case, demonstrators arrested charged the bonds were excessively high.

"These people are patriots" one attorney said. "Theirs was a nonviolent demonstration and the U.S. Supreme Court has upheld such demonstration."

The judges required $50 cash bonds and went as high as $2,500 in some cases. Very few met bond.

AMONG THOSE to appear before criminal court judge George Balbach were CORE national director James Farmer and Rustin.

Rustin posted a $50 cash bond on disorderly conduct charges but Farmer, charged with resisting arrest and disorderly conducct, remained in custody under $500 bond. A CORE official said he would "remain in jail."

Several persons charged with felonious assault on police officers had their bonds set at $2,500.

A SUBWAY train load of fair visitors was detained briefly Thursday morning when a white man identified as Lous Klein flagged down the train, then lay down on the road bed between the tracks. Police took him to a precinct station for questioning.

Between 600 and 700 demonstrators, in protests organized chiefly by CORE, entered the fair Wednesday.

Police said a total of 299 persons, a third of them white and most of them youths, were arrested throughout the day. All had been araigned by early Thursday morning.
