—Welcome case

Judge Harry E. Dyer Jr.

A co-defendant now awaiting sentence, Harold T. Williams, had testified Tuesday that he had overheard Mr. Young tell Curtis King, accused gunman in the assassination plot, that "She (Mrs. Welcome) must be gotten off the street."

Near the end of his relatively brief stay in the witness chair, Mr. Young was asked point blank:

"Did you ever conspire with anybody to help kill (Mrs.) Verda Welcome?"

"No, no!" he answered.

In an obvious effort to rebut the state's attempt to prove that the delegate stood a chance of replacing Mrs. Welcome if the murder try had succeeded, Mr. White asked the defendant:

"Did you want her job?"

"No. I feel I am more effective in the House than she is in the Senate."

EARLIER IN the trial Charles E. Moylan Jr., chief prosecutor for Baltimore, had introduced evidence showing that in the event of Mrs. Welcome's death, two members of the District State Central Committee, which fill the vacancy, were political allies of Mr. Young.

AT ONE point in the cross examination Mr. Young told Mr. Moyland that "I don't think I was treated fair by the police and state's attorney's office."

He was referring to the case in which he was convicted of obstructing justice.

Sentence has been deferred pending the outcome of a new trial motion.

Both the state and defense rested at 3:55 p.m. Thursday. Summations to the jury and Judge Dyer's charge will be given today (Friday) and the panel will retire for deliberation.

During the week-long trial, moved to Harford County on a change of venue, Mr. Young heard himself described as the "Big Man" in the plot to kill Mrs. Welcome.

The first colored woman senator in the state's history sustained two bullet wounds when would-be assassins opened fire at close range as she was about to leave her car after parking on the north side of her Liberty Heights Ave. home.

Throughout the week Mr. Moyland, Edwin H. W. Harlan, Harford County state's attorney; Morton A. Sachs and Donald Needle, Mr. Moylan's assistants, have produced lengthy testimony which, they contend, shows that the legislator masterminded the botched gunman-for-hire venture.

EACH OF the convicted co-defendants told of trips to Mr. Young's law office and having been shown the house where Mrs. Welcome lives.

One, James G. McCoy, told the jury Wednesday that when the fingered trigger-man, King, asked Mr. Young for money after the shooting, the attorney replied:

"I might get you some money, but I can't yet you all the money because the job was blundered."

King is the only one of the five men who has not been tried. He is undergoing psychiatric tests after entering an insanity plea.

Williams, 300 block N. Franklintown Rd., Charles Hall, of New York, and McCall, 200 block N. Stricker St., all testified to visiting Mr. Young's office.

IN HIS defense Thursday, the delegate denied knowing McCall and Hall.

Mr. White introduced documents purporting to show that the attorney filed an income tax return for King and represented him in an automobile accident case, which Mr. Young admitted was never settled.

His only contact with Williams, the defendant told the jury, was when the former sought his advice in connection with a divorce.

It was testified earlier that Mr. Williams had been separated from his wife for 30 of 40 years of marriage.

Williams, McCall and Hall all said they were to be paid for their part in the plot.

Williams said he was to have received between $300 and $400. McCoy testified that King promised to pay him $1,000 while keeping $5,000 for himself.

HALL, A YOUTHFUL ex-convict who has served a prison sentence in New York, said King was to pay him $500 for "ringing the bell."

When he and McCoy went to Mrs. Welcome's home on March 26, Hall testified, he was to ring the bell to get Mrs. Welcome to the door.

According to the prearranged plan, he said in answer to a question by Mr. Moylan, when the senator answered the door, McCoy was "to kill the lady inside."

John Jones, the state's star witness, said he was with King and McCoy on April 10 when the former opened fire on Mrs. Welcome with a .32-caliber automatic.

Jones said he got in the car for what he thought would a ride around town and one of the numerous drinking sessions described during the trial.

AFTER THE shooting, Jones quoted King and McCoy as telling him "you are dumb to facts."

"We just killed a woman," he said King told him before "putting down rules for me."

The witness said King told him "somebody big is behind this" and warned him that "I have nothing to lose, you have a wife and children."

All co-defendants agreed that they dealt directly with directly with King, who said the "big man" only wanted to deal with him.

On one occasion, after visiting the attorney's office, McCall said, King told him that "if she is killed by 11 p.m. he (McCoy) is to come to Young's house, knock on the door and he will get the money."

WHILE WAITING for Mrs. Welcome to arrive on one occasion McCoy told the court and jury, a man "in a small car" parked behind King's auto, in which they were riding.

After conferring with the driver he said, King returned and told them her (Mrs. (Welcome) car is in the garage and they loaned her another one."

He said that when they did not see "a white car," the assassination plan was abandoned for that night.

This admission confirmed earlier police reports that more than two attempts were made on Mrs. Welcome's life.

• • •

McCOY, ALSO said from the witness stand that King told him on one occasion that both the senator and "the doctor has got to go."

Mrs. Welcome's husband is Dr. Henry C. Welcome, physician.

One of the first defense witnesses was Miss Linda Randolph, 1700 block Ellamont St.

On direct questioning by Charles H. Jr., co-defense counsel, she gave a detailed account of incidents which purportedly took place on the day Williams and Kin" visited Mr. Young's office.

She recalled that the men were "high." Asked how she arrived at that conclusion the witness said they were "crouched over their seats."

MISS RANDOLPH answered that at the time she was Mr. Young's secretary, when Mr. Reed asked her what duties she had in the office.

Under pointed cross examination by Mr. Moylan, the witness said she does not type or take shorthand. "I answer the phone," she replied, after testifying that she also, worked in Annapolis for the legislator when the General Assembly was in session.

Asked by Mr. Moylan if she could remember who visited the office or called on other days, Miss Randolph said "I don't know."

Vernon H. Seth, 39, 2800 block Clifton Ave., also took the stand for the defense.

He gave his occupation as an employer and said he has known Mr. Young since they attended night school at Loyola University.

MR. SETH said he went with the attorney when he visited the Jones home on Payson St.

He denied hearing any conversation about the shooting, although he was in the car. "He (King) was talking about his 'ole lady," Mr. Seth said.

Called for reputal, Jones declared that only one person was in the car at the time Mr. Young talked to King while parked in front of his steps.

When Mr. White attemped to get them to concede that he didn't really know how many persons were in the car Jones said dryly:

"It was only one. If anybody else else was in it he must have been lyying down."

On cross examination by that he was convinced of that he was convicted of assault and attempted murder in 1947.

SHANNON, CAHSIER, 2,000 block Freshman St., real estate salesman, was scheduled to be a character witness, but left the stand when Judge Dyer upheld a motion by Mr. Moylan that his testimony be stricken.

Mr. Moylan argued successfully that he "was in no position to know Mr. Young's reputation in the community as to truth and veracity."

W. Dale Hess, House Majority leader from Carroll County, and Gilbert Rosenthal, a law school classmate of the attorney, were also barred from testifying as character witnesses for the same reason.

OBVIOUSLY NERVOUS, the attorney, whose feet barely touched the floor while he was sitting in the witness chair rocked from side to side throughout his testimony.

"Answer the question, Mr Young," Judge Dyer ordered several times when the defendant attempted to offer explanations before answering "yes," or "no."

Mr. White also interrupted to advise Mr. Young to "answer the question" during cross examination.

"I know you are nervous, but speak up so the jury can hear you," the defense attorney urged at another point.

Upon leaving the witness stand and taking his seat at the trial table the legislator took a deep breath, clasped his hands and resumed his blank stare at the jury panel.

violation of the Federal Civil Rights Act involve.

This, apparently, ends matters in this case, which attracted wide attention when many witnesses charged the officer was drunk at the time and the killing of Mr. Leopold was unprovoked.

Irate citizens' organizations demanded the officer be brought to trial. He was and subsequently acquitted.

Commissioner Schmidt, acting on further demands by these organizations for a more complete investigation, turned the case over to Mr. Finan for a check as to whether departmental charges should be placed against Patrolman Ray.
