Madison broto r to design embasAt ic Africa

The Madison brothers, Cleveland, Ohio architects who are well-known to Baltimoreans, have been awarded the contract to design the American Embassy buildings in Dakar, Senegal, Africa.

The US government assignment is in excess of $1½ million and the three young men, Julian C., a construction engineer; Robert P. and Bernard, architects are in conference with the US State Department on preliminary plans.

Dakar is a gateway city for air, land and sea travelers to Western Africa and was recently designated by the United States as the key city for its embassy.

Senegal gained independence from the French in 1960 and Dakar, its beautiful capital city, has become noted as a progressive modern town.

The final architectural design drawn by the Madison brothers will go before Congress for approval. The time schedule provides for construction to start in July.

Women make up bulk of bindery workers

WASHINGTON — (NNPA) — Women bookbinders form the bulk of workers in many binderies, especially in large firms employing assembly line operations.

Skilled bookbinders seldom perform all of the different edition bindery tasks, although many journeymen have had training in all of them.

* * *

IN LARGE SHOPS, skilled bindery women may be assigned to one or a few operations, most often to the machines.

About 54,000 women and men were employed in book bindery operations in early 1963, according to the Labor Department's Occupational Outlook Handbook.

* * *

MANY PRINTED ITEMS, such as books, magazines, must be folded, sewed, stapled, or bound after they leave the printing shops.

Much of this work is done by skilled bookbinders, who numbered about 22,000 in early 1963. Many bookbinders are employed in shops whose chief business is bookbinding. However, a considerable number are employed in the bindery departments of large book, periodical, and commercial printing plants and of large libraries.

* * *

THERE ARE SEVERAL different kinds of binderies. Edition and pamphlet binderies bind books, magazines, and pamphlets printed in large quantities. Trade or job binderies do bindery work on contract for printers, publishers, or other customers.

Blankbook and looseleaf binderies bind various types of blank books such as ledgers and bookkeeping and also produce looseleaf binders, and bind books in loose leaf form.

* * *

EDITION BINDING making books in quantity from big, flat printed sheets of paper — is by far the most complicated. The first step in the process is to fold the printed sheets into one or more units of four pages, known as "signatures," so that the sheets will be in the right order.

The next steps are to insert any illustrations that have been printed separately, together and assemble the signatures in proper order, and to sew them together.

* * *

THE RESULTING BOOK bodies are shaped with power presses and trimming machines, and fabric strips are glued to the backs for reinforcements. Covers are glued or pasted onto the book bodies, after which the books undergo a variety of finishing operations and, frequently, are wrapped in paper jackets.

A 4 or 5-year apprenticeship which includes on-the-job training as well as related classroom instruction is generally required to qualify as a skilled bookbinder. Apprenticeship programs may vary considerably among the various types of bookbinding shops.

* * *

APPRENTICESHIP applicants usually must have a high school education and be at least 18 years of age. Mechanical aptitude is helpful to the person entering the trade.

For the less skilled bindery occupations, the training period may last from several months to 2 years. In union shops, apprenticeship programs for women last 2 years.
