Citizens air views at hearing on Rosenberg Commission report

The only scheduled public hearing in Baltimore city on the Rosenberg Commission Report on Structure and Governance of Education in Maryland was held last Monday at the Poly-Western High School.

Conducted by a special task force appointed by Governor Mandel, the meeting allowed community members to not only gain a better understanding but air their views on the controversial report.

Under the recommendations, the city school system which has remained an independent body, would be brought under the "umbrella" of the State Department of Education with the other 23 systems in the state.

* * *

School Board President Norman P. Ramsey and Superintendent Dr. John Crew went to Annapolis Sept. 11 to present to the task force, the school system's initial position on those recommendations.

They cautioned that any modification of the current structure of state education must include "special safeguards to the interest of urban education, in general, and the interests of the city school system in particular.

"Lacking the provision of such safeguards and sufficient power base, the system would have little to gain from the proposed reorganization."

* * *

However, Mrs. Enolia P. McMillan, Baltimore branch NAACP president, spoke in strong support of the report during the hearing.

"We support the position of the Rosenberg Commission Report. It would make the Baltimore system a more integral part of the state system," said Mrs. McMillan.

"According to the proposals, we wouldn't lose our autonomy."

She noted that the NAACP would support upcoming legislation that is being prepared by the task force for introduction in the 1976 General Assembly.

The 26-member Rosenberg Commission which was selected by the governor, studied the education structure of the secondary and higher education levels.

The report, prepared after three years of study, was submitted to the governor last spring.

Study cites 'alienation' of District middle-class

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A study of a University of Hawaii professor indicates middle-class blacks with a college education in Washington, D.C., experience a high incidence of alienation from society in general.

"Despite the seemingly growing affluence of many blacks they do not have more in common with middle-class whites than they do with poor blacks," said Dr. Miles M. Jackson, professor of library and information sciences at the University of Hawaii at Manoa.

The study involved a sampling of 615 low and middle income blacks in the District. Dr. Jackson said the survey showed more than 50 per cent of both groups indicated they felt alienated from society.

* * *

"Surprisingly, almost 30 per cent of those who earned $20,000 a year fell into the highly alienated group," he said.

He said part of the reason is many blacks in the District have only reached the middle-class stratum in the past few years and they are "heterogenous culturally, but homogenous as a psychological community.

"The common element of the "black experience" is that most low and middle income blacks have known the frustrations of racism in the U.S.," he said. "Because of these realities it is almost impossible to group together blacks and whites of the middle class without taking into consideration the black psyche and lifestyles emanating out of the black experience."

* * *

Dr. Jackson said more recently, alienated college-educated blacks, like lower class blacks, have witnessed drastic cutbacks in federal support of poverty, health and education programs.

"This is especially so since most of the middle class blacks in Washington, D.C., are employed in such public sector jobs as teachers, administrators, social workers and types of public service occupations."

He said although the country's economic situation is affecting all sectors, "middle class blacks in a larger proportion than middle class whites are faced with the problem of being the last hired and the first fired during job cutbacks."

AFRO Clean Blockers are still reporting to us about the happenings in their block. 221 N. Fremont Ave., 10th floor advises us that they had a great party last Friday. They held the party in the Poe auditorium which they decorated with bowls of live flowers. They has a long table that was all beautifully decorated. Neighbors on the floor fried chicken, fixed macaroni salad, potato salad, cole slaw, punch and home made cakes. For the youngsters they also had hot dogs. Some neighbors donated money for the party. One good neighbor, Mrs. Sandra Rogers, made invitations with the help of Mrs. Gladys West, advisor, and sent to all the neighbors on the floor. Another good neighbor, Mrs. Hattie Williams, took her stereo, speakers and records so the youngsters could dance. Cant leave out Mrs. Patricia Hines and Mrs. Mary Bank who also worked very hard to make the affair so successful.

Mrs. West tells me that all of the neighbors cooperated beautifully just as they have done all summer. This shows what can be done when everyone tries.

Talked to the folks in the 1100 McKean Ave., the top award winning block. They had their party last Saturday. They had their street blocked off so the youngsters could dance and have a good time. Too bad they had such a problem getting neighbors to move their cars. Understand they had grills going and stereo playing along the block. It's sad that some neighbors objected to the loud music and to the youngsters playing ball during the party. If this doesn't happen regularly then it seems folks would be understanding for one day. Sure hope things are ironed out by now.

Mrs. Leona Davis, Advisor, 2700 Giles Rd. reports that the youngsters in her block have formed a block club which will be called the AFRO Clean Block Club. They have about 12 youngsters in the club, ranging in age from seven to thirteen years of age. They plan to take some of their award winning money and start their bank account. They will add to their account so that they will be able to buy flowers in the Spring. This is a beautiful idea and we hope that more blocks will do the same thing. To register your block, Call AFRO Clean Block, 728-8200.

Ms. Williams spearheads city United Fund campaign

Employees of Baltimore City can look forward to a most successful year in regard to the 1975 UNITED FUND-CICHA CAMPAIGN - the United Way of Central Maryland.

Behind this anticipation is Ms. Anita Williams, an attractive black woman who volunteered to serve as an Account Manager for the two-month fund-raising effort.

Usually a group relations specialist with the City's Community Relations Commission, Miss Williams has been "loaned" to the United Fund in order to help various City Agencies plan, implement, coordinate and conduct their own UNITED FUND-CICHA CAMPAIGN.

Many persons need assistance in developing a successful campaign," says Miss Williams. "As an account manager, it is my responsibility to provide these persons this assistance and to make sure they thoroughly understand the campaign, particularly the Fair Share Giving concept."

The account managers program was established by the United Fund in 1969. It relies upon men and women from the managerial ranks of various companies and government agencies who serve as an extension to the fund staff during the campaign.

"I've only been involved with the UNITED FUND-CICHA CAMPAIGN a little over two weeks," says Miss Williams, "and already I'm amazed at what I've learned in meeting this new challenge.

"Additionally, I've discovered how far reaching are the many human and health services available through the 95 United Fund-CICHA affiliated agencies.

"This is quite impressive and surely valuable information which I can provide those with whom I work after the campaign," she says.

A resident of the Forest Park area, Miss Williams is relatively new to Baltimore. She moved here from Los Angeles in February.

Still, she thinks, "The general Maryland United Way is a great campaign and one everyone can support by giving their Fair Share."

"The campaign slogan sums up Baltimore's image quite well," concludes Miss Williams. "Thanks to you, it's working."

The mother and daughter were forced upstairs and told to go to separate bedrooms. Police said the daughter was tied up with the electrical cord from a radio.
