According to a recent management newsletter — The Civil Service Commission will no longer ask federal job applicants whether they belong or have belonged to the Communist party or to any group advocating the forcible overthrow of the government. The Commission is eliminating the question from the application form (SF-171) because of recent federal court rulings that the questions were so broad that they encroach on rights protected by the first amendment. The Commission says it will continue to conduct full field investigations on applicants for employees in sensitive jobs.
