City Health Department's Bureau of School Health is control the problem.

"Dr. Polly Roberts, director of the Bureau, says that it is very difficult to know the exact number of people affected, but that reports of cases from parents and schools would indicate the problem is becoming widespread and steps must be taken to bring it under control.

"Scabies is really an irritation caused by an itch mite — Sarcoptes — Scabiei that burrows under the skin.

"The mites cause severe itching, especially between the fingers, backs of hands, elbows, armpits, groin, breasts, navel, small of the back and buttocks.

"Only a physician should diagnose it, since scabies resembles several other skin conditions. While no germ is spread by the mite itself, the itching causes scratching which can cause a skin infection that fingers introduce into the skin.

ADVICE

"Advice on the care and treatment of scabies is presently being sent to school principals and to parents whose children report itching or skin rash. In addition, a newly designed report form is being put into operation in the Baltimore Public Schools. By using this form, the extent of scabies infestation can be determined more accurately.

"Because scabies is highly contagious and takes time to cure, Dr. Roberts recommends that any student with suspected scabies be kept at home until diagnosed by physician, treated and given a written release by the physician to return to school.

"Information on treatment or protecting the home from scabies infestation may be obtained by calling the City Health Department's Bureau of School Health at 396-4460."

Short-punch tactic wins for Foreman

(UPI) — George Foreman says he has been working on short punches to develop endurance. The way he's been moving down opponents, however, it would seem that endurance is the least of his worries.

The former heavyweight champion demolished Puerto Rico's Pedro Agosto in the fourth round of a nationally - televised fight Saturday. He took it easy in the first round but started throwing body punches in the second and they come was never in doubt.

Foreman knocked Agosto to the canvas twice in the third round and decked him three times in the fourth. Referee Jay Edson stopped the fight at 2:34 of the round, after the three - knockdown rule.

"I was extra quick, because I've been working on shorter punches," Foreman said. "They will put you down and you might be able to get up. But when you get up you're gonna be dizzy, and I cankncok you down again."

It was Foremans fifth straight win in less than a year under his self - imposed schedule of a fight every two months to keep in shape while biding his time for a rematch with Muhammad Ali.
