James Brown in court again

Soul singer James Brown, who spent two nights in City Jail last summer, appeared in Federal Court June 5 with his attorneys who argued against efforts to hold him in contempt of court a second time.

The hearing before Magistrate Clarence E. Goetz was ordered by Judge C. Stanley Bair to determine the extent of Brown's assets and to see if he should be cited for contempt for not producing sufficient data.

Brown is being sued for contempt by the former owners of local radio station WEBB who want to collect the $170,00 they were awarded insa contract suit.

The soul singer bought the station in 1969 nd maintains he does not have the money to pay the award.

Attorney David H. Feldman asked Magistrate Goetz to hold Brown in contempt of court for not paying the money and withholding financial records subpoenaed by the former owners.

Magistrate Goetz postponed ruling on the motion until kune 12 when Brown is expected to testify.
