'Our Gang's' Buckwheat

Child star dies at 49

By Ida Peters

William (Billy) Thomas who gained fame as Buckwheat in the "Our Gang" comedies made at the old Hal Roach studios, was found dead of an apparent heart attack at his home in Los Angeles, last week.

Thomas who was 49 played in the "Our Gang" comedy series from 1934 to 1944. He was called Billy or Buckwheat and was born in Los Angeles on March 12, 1932. He was 3 years old, three feet tall and weighed 31 pounds in October, 1934 when his mother first brought him to the Hal Roach studios.

The son of Mr. and Mrs. William Thomas, who then lived at 1162 East 51st St., impressed studio officials even though in his first picture he was shy and cried when anyone talked to him.

The "Our Gang" series started in 1922 and he followed the popular star Frederick Ernest Morrison known as Sunshine Sammy. Later Pineapple, Farina, Stymie were the black boys playing against the roly-poly white boy Spanky.

Critics in the black press often expressed anger at the "Our Gang" comedies because many times the black children were frequently the butt of the other children's humor.

In many comedies of "Our Gang," not all, where Buckwheat was concerned, the black child shared in the high-jinks directed at another member of the gang.

In 1935, Etta Moton of Chicago visited on the set and Jacob Anderson filed a report for the AFRO. He reports that Buckwheat's mother was at the studio every day and he had a private teacher, a Mrs. Fern Carter.

He watched a hilarious scene where Buckwheat and Spanky went on a fishing trip and while straggling with the fishing line become frightened at an outdoor baptism. (And you know who was preaching and who was doing the baptizing).

Jacobson reports that the director, the cameraman and 30 or 40 assistants all were convulsed with laughter during the filming.

William Thomas is not listed in "Directory of Blacks in the Performing Arts" by Edward Mapp or in Daniel J. Leab's "From Sambo to Superspade."

Recent news reports state Thomas was involved with a James E. Frazier who claimed he was the real Buckwheat but Thomas was able to get the seal of authenticity from many of his fellow players.

Unlike Farina and Sunshine Sammy who became vauderville actors after they outgrew the program, William Thomas disappeared after he outgrew the "Our Gang" series.

Buckwheat in unused 1935 file photo. AFRO editors rejected it because they said it wasn't cute or funny but degrading to the race.

Night Scene Seen

By Bob Matthews

The gremlins which infest all newspapers crept into this column last week and the last half of the piece was preempted by a last minute advertisement.

So, to correct the inadvertently mistaken impression that we harbor some malice against local musicians, we print the rest of the column. Under discussion was one of our favorite horn men, Arnold Sterling, who we chided for getting lazy in his play.

Finally got over to the Park Plaza last Sunday night, where the John Lamkins group was the featured attraction. They will also be playing the club Thursday night.

Must admit we were quite impressed with the facilities at the Plaza, for the acoustics in the place were exquisite. The upstairs room is intimate enough to bring you every nuance of the music, which is devoutly to be wished in listening to music.

Although you can hear the music from the downstairs bar, if you want to see the musicians performing, you'll have to trek up the stairs. There is a $3 cover and two-drink minimum.

Have been listening to a lot of people saying that the Lamkins group has really improved, and we really must agree. What we liked best about his presentation is the plethora of new material that he constantly plays.

JIMMY McGRIFF
The Bandstand

At our last hearing, he decided to drop in one of the classics: "Body and Soul," which was magnificently performed. Couldn't help chuckling, however, when we noted that the pianist Lou Rainone and bassist Mark Russell were reading charts on the tune.

Egad! reading a chart on B and S—we were speechless. But then, when we confronted Lamkins, he admitted that he knows all the changes of the tune, but he plays it in the key of F-sharp, rather than the B or D-flat in which it is written.

It was while Joe was walling away on the podium, that Arnold Sterling stopped by "the corner" to inform me that trumpeter Red Rodney had asked him to sit in with him at The Bandstand that very night.

Smilingly agreed that this was a good thing, but was not overly impressed. Decided however, that maybe this should be checked out.

Following the LBJS set, went down to Fells Pt., and sure enough, onstage was Reuben Brown, piano; Steve Bagby, drums; Donald Bailey, bass, and Arnold Sterling on alto sax.

Now Red Rodney is a former member of the Charlie Parker band, and gigged many years with the legendary alto man. He is indeed steeped in bebop, which is why he was so impressed with Arnold.

For the first time, we listened to Arnold with our eyes closed, and thought it was Sonny Stitt. For years, Sonny has been tutoring Arnold, and it has really stuck.

This all went to reaffirm my faith, for with Red Rodney, et al, Arnold blew like he once did—and swung from the rafters—I was a beautiful set.

Which brings up the matter of the Fells Pt. Festival. As reported previously, The Bandstand was ignored in the planning for the festival. In fact, participation by blacks was practically zilch.

So, Mike Binsky arranged to hold a couple of matinees at The Bandstand both Saturday and Sunday. There was no admission charge, they merely placed an open sax case at the door, and patrons dropped in whatever they wanted.

One of the participants was Arnold, along With Andy Ennis, and many others, and although Mike isn't talking, methinks Red got a chance to hear the local musicians, and didn't object when Arnold was proposed as a sit - in artist.

It all worked, and prompts us to say to Arnold: "O.k., you can do it— stop fooling around—do it."

When people ask what is wrong with staying put and enjoying the local music scene, we have to reply that their horizons become limited. Unless they do a lot of listening, they don't learn the new sounds and music on the scene, and have to face boredom and stagnation.

At the Left Bank Jazz Society this week, multi-instrumentalist Ira Sullivan is the featured performer, which will undoubtedly make a lot of people happy in this area.

Ira, of course, was last in town at The Bandstand, and really demonstrated that he could play both reeds and horn with equal facility. This time, he will have his own group along, and this should be a concert to remember.

At The Bandstand this weekend, Organist Jimmy McGriff will pay one of his rare appearances in Baltimore. McGriff is noted for playing the blues on his organ, but believe it or not, he has an album to his credit done with Count Basie and the big band.

'Tis really a collector's item, and if you find it—let me know!

JUST A REMINDER: One of the best treats in the field will occur on November 1 at The Famous Ballroom, when the Dexter Gordon Quartet and the Johnny Griffin quartet will play two shows, one at 8 and the other at midnight.

'Nuff said.
