Home of Harriet Beecher Stowe

'Underground Railroad' museum restored in Ohio by students

By Rick Van Sant

CINCINNATI (UPI) — The rafters are low in the basement of Harriet Beecher Stowe's old home.

Towering, 6 - foot - 8 - inch George Wilson has to stoop when he peers into the basement cubbyholes where slaves scrambled to freedom 130 years ago.

He feels no inconvenience in stooping. He senses his "roots" are in the basement — and throughout the historic house.

"If this house wasn't here," he says, "maybe I wouldn't be here."

Wilson, a former All - American basketball player, has helped renovate the once - deteriorating home. Now it is a "living museum," open free of charge to the public.

The big, white, two - story home enhances a hill in the old Walnut Hills section of the city. It was the pre - civil war home of Harriet Beecher Stowe (1811 - 1896).

All Mrs. Stowe did, some contend, is start the Civil War.

Start it or not, there's no doubt that this white woman triggered immense sentiment against slavery, a key cause of the war.

She wrote the powerful, landmark anti - slavery novel "Uncle Tom's Cabin" in 1851 - 52. The ideas for the book came while she lived in Cincinnati from 1832 - 50.

Her father, Rev. Lyman Beecher, was dedicated to freeing and educating slaves. He used his house as a stop on the "Underground Railroad," a system by which slaves escaped the southern U.S. to freedom in the north.

Under the cover of darkness, slaves crept through the woods then surrounding the Stowe home. They slipped through a tunnel leading into the basement and slept on straw in small hideaways until the time was right to move on north.

Although the house prompted Mrs. Stowe to help change the course of the nation, the home had fallen into disrepair in recent years.

'UNDERGROUND' RAILROAD — Six-foot-8-inch George Wilson has to stoop in the basement of Harriet Beecher Stowe's house in Cincinnati, which 130 years ago was a stop on the "Underground Railroad' — a system by which slaves escaped from the South to freedom in the North. His hands are on concrete slab that covers tunnel that led into basement. Wilson, a former All-American basketball player, has helped restore the historic house.

"It was a group of students that really sparked the renovation," says Luther Church, executive director of Citizens' Committee on Youth, the local group which oversaw restoration.

"Four years ago, they went to the house to do research and found it padlocked. The home was run down. Just appalling."

After more than three years of government - assisted youth work, the home has been meticulously restored.

"This was a family of character, of ideals," says Marybell Brown, museum coordinator. "This is a house of history, of humanitarianism. This house represents the way men should live together.

But doing research for the museum was difficult to take sometimes. Slavery was total dehumanization. It was a very sadistic social system. Some of the slaves were treated worse than animals."

Mrs. Stowe and her husband, also a minister, moved to Brunswick, Maine, in 1850, where she wrote "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

"But," says Ms. Brown, "Obviously everything she learned here went into that book."

The "humanitarianism" that sparked Mrs. Stowe in Cincinnati carried risks.

"Cincinnati was supposedly a freeearea, but slaves were kept just across the Ohio River in Kentucky and bounty hunters operated in this area," said Ms. Brown.

"You might say Cincinnati was just lukewarm to the Underground Railroad. So, the basement tunnels were needed in this house."

Visiting the basement is an eerie sensation. To some, like Wilson, it goes beyond that.

"I get mad when I come down here," he says. "It angers me that people had to go through all this just to try to pull even with other people — to get what they always should have had."

Feds plan double dose flu shot next winter

ATLANTA (UPI) — Federal health officials, concerned by what may be the nation's most severe influenza epidemic in six years, plan to double the potency of next winter's flu vaccine.

The new vaccine will be a trivalent type, protecting against three influenza viruses — A Bangkok, B - Singapore and a variant of the A - USSR strain.

A final decision or the vaccine's makeup by the surgeon general's office will not be made for three weeks, however, because of a continuing change or "drift" in the A - USSR virus.

Virology experts at the National Centers for Disease Control (CDC) are expected to complete laboratory studies on the changing virus in that time and make recommendations to federal health officials.

The decision to double the potency of the current anti - flu injection was made during a surgeon general's meeting at the CDC after officials heard reports of studies showing that increasing the strength of the vaccine would continue its effectiveness even if there are minor mutations in the flu virus.

The studies also indicated that doubling the strength of the vaccine would not increase the likelihood of side effects.

Dr. William Foege, director of the CDC, said deaths due to the current flu epidemic have been above the "epidemic threshold" for six weeks.

Several state health officials said there have been more influenza cases this winter than in any previous winter of the past five or six years.

"We obviously are in the middle of a significant national influenza epidemic," said Foege.

State health departments have administered 670,000 flu vaccinations this winter, using funds left over from the Federal Free Flu Shot Program that expired last year, Dr. Alan Hinman, director of the CDC's immunization division, said.

One problem has been a shortage of the vaccine. Hinman said state health departments have reported a shortage of about 200,000 doses.

The CDC's latest morbidity and mortality weekly report listed 990 deaths from flu and pneumonia for the week ended Jan. 24 — the seventh straight week the number of fatalities has been higher than normal and the third consecutive week it has been near the 1,000 mark.

The CDC listed 41 states with either widespread or regional flu outbreaks. Although the CDC listed two states — New Mexico and Oklahoma — with no influenza cases, there were in fact widespread school closings due to flu in Oklahoma.

Herbert W. Wright, 65, Philip Morris executive

NEW YORK CITY — Funeral services were held here Jan. 14 for Herbert W. Wright, executive director for urban affairs for Philip Morris Ltd.

Mr. Wright, 65, died in a New York City hospital after a long illness from cancer. He had been a Philip Morris executive for 35 years.

Burial services were conducted at St. Marks Church.

He made his home in North Miami Beach, Fla.

Wright was born in Tallahassee; attended Bethune Cookman Elementary School and Tuskegee, Alabama High School. While in high school, he became interested in marketing and sales when he sold sandwiches and ice cream to his classmates.

Herb went to Brick, N.C., where he attended Brick Jr. College and on to Morehouse College in Atlanta, Ga., where he graduated with honors in Business Administration.

Herbert Wright

When he left college, he was employed by Atlanta Life Insurance Company until he went into federal service as Chief of Civilian Payroll at Tuskegee Air Force Base, Tuskegee, Alabama.

Herb was in the "people business", but there were not enough personal contacts for him, so he became Director of the Neppherhan Community Center in Yonkers, N.Y., until 1945 when he became a salesman for the Philip Morris Company.

The ladder of success beckoned as he moved to Supervisor of College Students; Assistant Sales Promotion Manager; Manager of Public Relations Administration; Director of Urban Affairs; and Executive Director of Urban Affairs.

Wright is an Honorary Citizen of Baton Rouge, La., New Orleans, La., and Louisville, Ky. He received a Letter of Commendation from the late Senator H. Humphrey for service to youth.

African nations make plans for Knoxville World's Fair

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — More than 17 African nations have already indicated that they will participate in the 1982 Knoxville World's Fair.

The favorable responses came following a presentation of the Fair's program at the Ivory Coast Embassy in Washington.

Ivory Coast Charge d'Affaires Denis Ouapeu acted as the African host urging participation in the six - month event beginning May 1, 1982.

The Knoxville World's Fair, called Expo '82, is the first in the South in 85 years and the first official one in the United States in almost two decades. Although New York had a fair in 1964 - 5, it was an outlaw fair not recognized by international fair organizations.

So far many nations have reserved space in what was once one of the city's worst slum areas. So far the largest national buildings will be those of the United States and the People's Republic of China.

Following the meeting between African officials and the World's Fair, the United Republic of Cameroon extended an official invitation to the World's Fair to visit that nation for the purpose of discussing participation. A visit by Fair officials to that nation, with a population of eight million, is planned during the spring trip.

Zambia has expressed interest in a multi - nation pavilion, and will agree to participation when commitments are obtained from 11 other nations.

"The African continent is divided into over 45 nations, and we seek to unity them under a common theme to create a powerful continental statement," Fair spokesman Theotis Robinson said.

Nations represented at the reception included: Zaire, Tanzania, Togo, Niger, Malawi, Upper Volta, Morocco, Burundi, Gambia, Gabon, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Madagascar and the Ivory Coast.
