—CEBO cuts

of who has won the bid for the federal funds, despite the request made by the Department of Commerce, but the gap in funding for the many CEBO projects means that the organization's 482 clients are currently without the services MBDA provides for.

The entire progress of developments has CEBO officials somewhat confused; as for 10 years, the MBDA contract awards were what is called "single service awards, eliminating the need for the bid process."

But two years ago, the situation changed, encouraging other companies to compete for the funds CEBO had maintained exclusively for a decade.

Until this year, those efforts on the part of the other companies had been unsuccessful, Daniels said, who added that he is somewhat puzzled as to why CEBO had to begin bargaining for the funds in the first place.

John Murphy III, chairman of the board for CEBO, voiced the same concern.

Murphy said that if it is the case that another company has in fact won the bid for the funds, he is not sure that it will be sympathetic to the needs of minority businessmen.

He said that without the intervention of an organization such as CEBO, many minority businesses will find it difficult to get through the maze of red tape in emerging on their business careers.

A source at CEBO, who asked to remain anonymous, wondered what specific expertise another company woould bring to the area of helping minority businessmen get their feet off the ground.

Murphy said that although a debriefing session must be held by law in Washington once the results of the bidding process are known, it is highly unlikely that CEBO will be able to convince the government to reconsider its decision.

What that session will do, he said, is allow CEBO to know who has won the bid this year, and why.

The AFRO was unable to get a statement from MBDA officials at presstime, and neither Daniels nor Murphy could indicate when the federal government would announce the winner of the bid.

The federal government, according to Murphy, removed desks and typewriters from the MBDA offices in the Mondawmin Shopping Center on April 1 of this year. Last week, 15 workers were laid off, and Murphy said he does not know how many others will lose their jobs as well.
