BRICE'S MILL

JOSEPH BRICE, Proprietor.

Bake things he likes with FLAVO FLOUR. It's healthful and tissue building. There is more nutrition and a sweeter taste in FLAVO FLOUR. It is made with a new process by the most modern mill in the world. Nature's food values and the delicious flavor of the wheat are not milled out as they are by other methods. FLAVO FLOUR is milled at home from home wheat. It is good. Buy it and patronize Home Industry.

PLANTS WITH ODD POWERS

Many Strange Beliefs Have Been Credited to Particular Species of Growing Things.

Some plants and flowers are supposed to possess strange powers.

One of these is the mandragora, a species of the nightshade tribe, which is said to utter shrieks on being torn from the ground, and to revenge itself by killing the person who picked it. The Romans, who attached great value to the plant, never gathered it without performing a weird ceremony.

Our ancestors considered all plants growing on wild heaths and in lonely churchyards and old ruins to possess evil powers. The moonwort was supposed to be able to open locks and unshoe horses, while vervain, which was under the protection of the goddess Venus, was a sure protection against witchcraft and the bites of snakes. This plant was used to decorate the altars of the ancient Persians and the druids.

St. John's wort was able, it was said, to put to flight ghosts, demons, and even Satan himself. Mistletoe was called the "all-heal" plant and was used by doctors to cure any disease. Other charms against evil spirits were the rowan-tree and the homely "honesty," which is found in many country gardens to this day. The latter, declared to be under the protection of the moon, was supposed to be endowed with many magic properties.—London Tit-Bits.

SUPERSTITION IN BACK SEAT

Man Forgot All Dreambook Lore When His Beloved Thatch of Hair Was Threatened.

A friend of mine is one of the most superstitious men. In fact, I think he has as fine a collection of dreambooks as any man in the country, and he is an authority on all things that pertain to superstition, says a writer in the Washington Star. He can tell you, without an instant's hesitation, just what the action of a black cat might mean, what the finding of a four-leaf clover, under certain conditions, signifies; just how and when a horoscope should be cast. But the other night he came a cropper. After a hard day's work he had tumbled into bed, only to have his rest disturbed by a most distressing nightmare, the salient feature of which was the picture of his handsome suit of black and gray hair having departed, leaving him nearly as bald as the front-row patrons of the old-time burlesque shows. Did he get up in the morning and consult one of the dreambooks that occupy a prominent place in his library? He did not. He hurriedly dressed, bolted his breakfast and dashed around to the corner drug store and bought three bottles of hair tonic.

Order, Not Disorder.

May we not say, moreover, while so many of our late heroes have worked rather as revolutionary men, that nevertheless every great man, every genuine man, is by the nature of him a son of order, not of disorder? It is a tragic position for a true man to work in revolutions. He seems an anarchist, and indeed a painful element of anarchy does encounter him at every step—him to whose whole soul anarchy is hostile, hateful. His mission is order; every man's is. He is here to make what was disorderly, chaotic, into a thing ruled, regular. He is the missionary of order, is not all work of man in this world a making of order? The carpenter finds rough trees; shapes them, constrains them into square fitness, into purpose and use. We are all born enemies of disorder; it is tragical for us all to be concerned in image breaking and down pulling; for the great man, more a man than we, it is doubly tragical.—Carlyle's "Heroes and Hero Worship."

No Thunderstorms at Poles.

The world has its "blind spots" for thunder and lightning, says a bulletin of the National Geographic society. The brilliant flash of lightning and the crackle and thunder would be as impossible of conception by many Eskimos as would "solid water" by equatorial savages.

In general the frequency of thunderstorms decreases as one goes north, until within the Arctic and Antarctic circles they seldom occur.

When Katmai volcano, on the Alaskan peninsula, erupted in 1912, some of the adult natives of the vicinity were more terrified at the lightning and thunder that accompanied the dust clouds than at the possibility of being buried by ash, because they had nothing in their lifelong experience by which to judge the blinding and deafening noise from the skies.

Ostriches Worth Money.

Legend makes out the ostrich to be a bird living wild in the desert on a hard and indigestible fare of stones. But this is not the bird that produces the feathers which fashion demands. Those fine plumes you see in hats come from a bird well fed on scientific lines by farmers in South Africa. Feathers from the wild ostrich of the Sudan rarely come into the market.

The farmer watches the ostrich as any other stock, dieting him and breeding him with the object of producing better and better feathers. A pair of ostriches—you count ostriches in pairs—the cock and the hen—that have got into the way of producing really the best are worth about $5,000.
