Curtis Anderson receives Bob Roundtree Award

By Minnie L. Ross

"It's important for us - as black people to do whatever we can for each other, we need this type of communication. I will never get so big that I will look down on my fellow man."

These words quoted by Baltimore's own native son, 28 - year - old Curtis Anderson, WWIN's Program Director taken from an in depth interview with the young man in 1979.

Just recently "Curtis, the man" received the Bob Roundtree award. This award was presented at the Black Music Convention in Atlantic City just recently.

D.J.'s from all over the country were at the convention, (Family Affair) but Curtis was the young man chosen for the highest award.

The plaque read, 'Jack The Ripper, Bob Roundtree award given in recognition to Curtis Anderson for your total involvement in black radio and black music presented at The Family Affair — Joy, Peace and Love.

We want to congratulate Curtis for being selected to receive such a distinguished award. Anderson has been involved in radio for 12 years.

During his 12 years his voice has been heard on WRDW, Augusta, Georgia, WJB Knoxville, Tenn., WNJR Newark, N. J., WEBB, Baltimore.

In addition to being WWIN's program director, he can be heard six days a week on prime time from 3 to 7 p.m. utilizing his successful technique he created at WWIN Radio.

God Bless our young people, again I'll say, "They are our future generation of tomorrow." Let's expose them as much as we possibly can.

Program for elderly

The federal government has agreed to continue a $3.5 million program for long-term health care for the elderly in Maryland.

The decision, announced by Governor Harry Hughes and Baltimore Mayor William Donald Schaefer, came after the two Maryland officials wrote Health and Human Services Secretary Richard Schweiker asking that the program be continued.

WOMAN OF THE YEAR — Hattie Smith, owner of Hattie's Head Hunters, a local beauty salon, was recently named 'Woman of the Year' during the 62nd annual Convention Trade Show and Institute held in Texas. Ms. Smith was selected from among 3,000 contestants.

Dr. Gibbons named fellow of American Nursing Academy

Ms. Lillian K. Gibbons, Dr. P.H., R.N., of Columbia, Md., has been named a fellow of the American Academy of Nursing. Academy President Mary E. Conway, Ph.D., R.N., announced that Dr. Gibbons is one of 62 new fellows admitted to the academy, composed of registered nurses who have made significant contributions to the nursing profession.

Dr. Gibbons has recently been appointed director of programs and planning of the Health Systems Division, Westinghouse Electric Corporation.

She was awarded the Congressional Science Fellowship for 1980-81 by the American Association for the Advancement of Science and the Society of Research in Child Development. She was placed in the influential United States Senate Finance Committee on the health professional staff.

During her tenure prior to her appointment at Westinghouse, she was involved with the committee's activities related to the impact of President Reagan's budget and legislative proposals on some of the major health care programs in this nation.

She was instrumental in setting up hearings on the Title V Maternal and Child Health program and on the Title XIX Medicaid Cap proposals. She worked with key health leaders on the national and state levels to study the implications of the proposals.

From Sept. 1978 to Sept. 1980, she was the regional a advisor for Primary Health Care for the Pan American Health Organization, World Health Organization, Washington, D.C. She was a frequent consultant for health leaders in both Central and South America and the Caribbean in the areas of research practice and care and developed seminars for inter-disciplinary health care professionals in Latin America in the field of primary health care.

She developed and taught the first courses in nursing research in the undergraduate nursing program at the Johns Hopkins University.

Dr. Gibbons designed and implemented the first large scale study to analyze the rise in cesarean sections from 1968-73 for doctoral dissertation. She presented results from her study at the annual meeting of the Association of Teachers of Maternal and Child Health, Apr. 1976, and a research colloquium at the School of Nursing, University of Maryland, June 1980.

From 1977-78 she was the project director of a United States Department of Health, Education, and Welfare funded project. "Nursing Curriculum Design to Promote Role Transition," and research consultant in methodology from 1978 to 1980, on another H.E.W. Division of Nursing funded project entitled "Cultural Factors in Hypertension of Spanish Speakers."

The American Academy of Nursing was established in 1973 by the American Nurses' Association to advance new concepts of nursing care and to identify and explore issues in health care as they affect nursing, as well as to offer solutions to issues confronting nursing health.

Sixty-two new fellows of the academy will be formally admitted at the evening banquet on Sept 21, at the International Inn, Washington, D.C. where the academy's annual meeting will be held from the 20 through the 22.

Hopkins prof. leads trip to China

The dean of the Johns Hopkins Medical School will lead a delegation of clinical and molecular geneticists on a visit to China to discuss developments in the field with Chinese doctors, the school said Monday.

Dr Richard Ross will head the Sept. 23 visit, which picks up the thread of contact between Hopkins and Chinese institutions begun in 1915. Ross and several other doctors will visit Peking's Chinese Academy of Medical Sciences and Capital Medical College of China during the two week visit.

A 1951 Hopkins graduate, Dr. Wilson Lo, is the resent director of the Chinese academy.

The delegation includes nobel prize winners Danie Nathans and Hamiilton Smith and Dr. John Littfield, developer of several techniques essential to genetic engineering, the school said.

"Population control has the highest priority in China. If only one child is allowed for each Chinese family, they want to ensure a healthy chid," Ross said.

Since diplomatic relations between the U. S. and China were reestablished, 31 Chinese scholars have visited the Hopkins medical school in Baltimore.

The first contact between Hopkins and Chines doctors was in 1915 when William Welch, the first Hopkins dean of medicine, helped establish the Peking Union Medical College, now the Chinese academy.

Ms. Callahan awarded grant

Ms. Joan C. Callahan, a Ph.D. candidate at the University of Maryland at College Park, has been awarded a 1981 Newcombe Fellowship. Ms. Callahan was one of the 45 winners nationwide to receive the fellowship to support doctoral dissertation work in ethics and religious values.

The fellowship is funded by the Charlotte W. Newcombe Foundation, which was established in 1980 by the will of the late Mrs. Newcombe, a Philadelphia philanthropist.

Callahan, who resides in Beltsville, Md., is currently a doctoral candidate in phisology at the University of Maryland. She was selected from a group of 465 applicants for her outstanding academic ability and the significance of her research. Her proposed dissertation title is "On Justifying Paternalistic Interference with Adults."

Newcombe Fellowships provide up to 15 months of uninterrupted research and writing for doctoral dissertation candidates working on their dissertations. Winners include students in a variety of academic disciplines but they share a concentration on "the search for better understanding of the values that shape human development," according to the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation which announced the winners.

Ms. Callahan's other recent awards include the 1980 American Association of University Women Graduate Prize for Academic Achievement; nomination to Phi Kappa Phi and 1980 of Sanborn Essay Competition.

Unwed mothers' rate rises

Unwed mothers in Maryland gave birth to 6,983 infants during the first half of 1981, more than 28 percent of the births in the state during that time, figures released Monday showed.

Numbers compiled by the Maryland Center for Health Statistics showed that the illegitimacy rate among Maryland jurisdictions ranged from a high of 57.8 percent in Baltimore to a low of 13 percent in Carroll County.

The figures compare with a national rate of 16 percent during 1979, the latest year for which national figures were available, as compiled by the Allen Buttmacher Institute in New York.

The illegitimate birth rate was highest among non-white mothers in Baltimore has risen from 34.4 percent of 75.4 percent, he said.

Montgomery County's 353 births by unwed mothers accounted for 16.4 percent of the total, Tamill said. The number of such births in some other counties and their percentage of total births were: Prince George's County, 799 births, 26.7 percent; Washington County, 89 births, 14.9 percent and Wicomico County, 121 births, 27.4 percent.

Kathy Cook, head of Baltimore's single parent services, tied the rising rate of illegitimate births to mounting peer pressure on the young to be sexually active.

"In the last 10 or 15 years, it has become acceptable for a man and woman to live together without being married and acceptable for women to have children without getting married," Ms. Cook said.

"The stigma of illegitimacy is mostly gone, even among those middle class white girls who used to go into a private home and and then put their babies up for adoption.
