First black legislator for Baltimore Co.?

By James M. Abraham
AFRO Staff Writer

A new face may assume one of Baltimore Country's legislative seats in Annapolis come next year, and he may be the first black ever to do so.

Although Keith Dorsey, currently vice-president of the Center for Environmental Studies in Washington, D.C., has not formally announced his candidacy, there is a strong likelihood that he may throw his hat in the ring.

Dorsey was honored Sunday at a reception in Baltimore County, sponsored by a black "citizens' group, "We Too Belong."

Elected officials at the affair included 5th district City Councilman Norman Reeves, whose district abets the county Council Del. Larry Young, D-38, president of CUES.

Young, fresh from the bruising city redistricting battle, said that the time has come in Baltimore County for black leadership.

"Who best to articulate the idea, who best to lead the movement, to wage a campaign ... but Keith Dorsey," Young stated.

Ed Daniels, co-founder of "We Belong," said that black citizens of the area have been ignored by elected officials from the 12 District, where Dorsey may seek a seat.

"By and large, the population below the Beltway on Liberty Heights has not really been represented ... we feel we have a just cause," he told the audience.

Dorsey himself was brief in his remarks, but outlined several key problems he said must be addressed.

He said that the concerns of the elderly, a rising crime rate, family disinegration, and voter apathy are among the main issues.

"Referring to many in the region who have not been brought into the mainstream of local politics, he said, "These are people who have fallen through the gaps ... they feel that the American dream has passed them by."

But Dorsey's campaign, if it gets ignited, could change all of that. During his ill - starred campaign for the Democratic State Central Committee, the voting rate of two black Liberty Road districts increased from 45 percent to 60 percent.

"Officials have avoided the area," said Dorsey, "because they've felt that there was no significant vote out there."

Should Dorsey decide to seek office, he will have the advantage of a tight-knit campaign staff formidable campaign staff, judging from those present at Sunday's affair.

His campaign probably will be managed by his sister, Linda Walker, who last served in the exciting Chicago campaign of that city's current mayor, Jane Byrne.

Apparently Daniels' group, "We Too Belong," is behind the candidate, and they have prepared an impressive battery of research information which pinpoints every precinct in the area.

Currently, the 12th district is represented in Annapolis by state Senator Melvin Steinberg and delegates Paula Hollinger, Theodore Levin and Arthur Alperstein. All but Hollinger live in the Pikesville area.
