Mishaps In The Chesapeake

A colored man, alone on an oyster boat in Long Cove, near Rock Hall, went ashore in a small boat Sunday afternoon, got a barrel of water and started back to the larger vessel. He was heard to cry for help, but could not be found. It is supposed the boat sank with him. His hat and the barrel were afloat. The vicinity has been dragged without success. The master on the vessel, Capt. Taylor, returned from Baltimore on the ferry Sunday evening.

Capt. Franklin Akers found two men adrift in a boat on the river Monday evening and brought them ashore at Grey's Inn. One of the negroes was from Baltimore and the other from Queenstown,the place from which they started. They were dircted to the home of some colored people in the vicinity.

Country Press Remains American

(From The Easton "Star Democrat)

Once again we are having driven home the fact that the safeguard of American liberty rests in the country press, appealing as it does to sixty millions of the American people, reflecting their honest thought, and presenting to them basic facts in a plain, neighborly way that defies the inroads of the great metropolitan newspapers. The American country newspaper, thank God, does not stand constantly at attention ready to salute the first dollar that comes along, no matter in what uniform it is dressed.

When our boys were fighting "over there" the patriotic hysteria of the city's newspapers knew no bounds. They broke their editorial necks vieing with each other in denunciation of the Hun. Circulation demanded patriotism, and patriotism paid. With peace, however, readers dwindled and then the business office took the saddle. New York, Chicago and one or t owother big centers contain America's German population in mass formation. The number of French folk is comparatively small. The answer was obvious, particularly to a press ready to burn its honor on the altar of added readers. No time was lost to make a point when France saw fit to enter the Ruhr to enforce payment for the devastation of her lands. The German reader must be had at any cost. In the twinkling of an eye some of the big city newspapers turned 'bout face without a blush, and they played their cards practically if now knowingly in partnership with the German propagandist.

Were it not for the steadying influence of the country press, which keeps its feet on the ground—were it not for the calm judgment of the plain American pepole in the small towns, the German influence would already have gained its former dangerous and dominating position in this country. Fortunately for America the country newspaper refuses to be led into the by-lanes of foreign intrigue. The country newspaper is an American institution and it will remain the bulwark of our liberty.
