Poverty level Marylanders will spend more on heating, transportation

Poverty level Marylanders — and low income Americans in general — will spend up to a third of their incomes for heating, transportation and other energy costs by 1990., a University of Maryland specialist said this week.

Dr. Philip G. Favero, a community resource development specialist with the university's extension program, also said the average American household will be spending about 11 percent of its disposable income for energy costs by the end of the 1980s.

Favero said "comparatively stable gasoline prices during recent months may have lulled Maryland residents and Americans in general — into a false sense of security about the energy situation."

He predicted gas would average $1.58 a gallon at the pump by 1990, "not counting any price rise due to inflation , making it more than twice as expensive as in 1975.

He also said natural gas, fuel oil and bottled gas will more than double their average 1975 prices by 1990, and that prices for electricity over the same 15 - year period will increase by about one - third.

"Energy prices during the decade of the 1980s will continue to rise faster than the rate of inflation, both in Maryland and the U.S., he said. "In fact, energy costs may be the most serious problem facing persons living at or below the poverty level."

Among the assumptions on which Favero based his predictions were that energy production from nuclear power will nearly triple during the 1980s, although it will still be less than 10 percent of the total U.S. energy output.

Perhaps the biggest shift will be toward increased reliance on coal, for which production is expected to nearly double, making coal the source of one - third of the nation's domestic energy production.

Favero predicted smaller increases in energy produced from geothermal, hydro-electric and solar sources and said the output of petroleum and liquitied natural gas will probably drop during the decade.

Natural gas production, he said, will be down nearly 10 percent.

Shock trauma unit seeks $$$

The University of Maryland's Shock - Trauma Unit is asking the state for $3 million in funds for the planning of a new $67 million center, the unit's executive director said this week.

John W. Ashworth said the unit, which deals with the victims of traffic accidents, shootings and serious stabbings from across Maryland, wants the state senate's budget and taxation committee to support a $3 million grant for the center's architectural designing fee.

Ashworth conceded that the state - run Central Maryland Health System's agency has not yet approved shock - trauma's plans or funding for the proposed center.

The shock trauma unit currently has 71 beds, but the new center would have room for 230 patients in its seven - story, 420,000 square - foot building. In addition, tentative plans call for a helicopter pad on the rooftop to speed up the transport of critically injured patients.

5th K-Mart suspect arrested

The fifth and final suspect charged with murder in the Oct. 25 K-Mart killing of Keith E. Bee, an assistant manager at the Wabash Avenue store, surrendered to police at Northwestern District Thursday morning.

Karl Brooks, 22-year-old brother of Kirk Brooks, who is also charged with murder in the K-Mart shooting was being held without bail at AFRO press time. He is scheduled to appear before a district court judge today (Friday) for a bail review.

Bee arrived at the store around 7:30 a.m. to admit an employee's relief stock clerk. He had taken his son to the store with him. Police report he was found dead around 8:30 p.m. and been shot in the back of the head with a 410 guage shotgun taken from the sporting goods department during a robbery at the store, which was closed at the time.

His wife, Mrs. Monica Bee gave birth to their son, Bee's namesake, minutes after her husband was killed.

Others charged in the shooting are Ricky Thomas, 25; Harvey A. Bennett, 19; Clinton Wesley Ellison, 21 and Kirk Brooks, 20.

According to papers filed in connection with a bail hearing for one of the suspects in the case, the death of Bee, 27, apparently was the result of a last minute foul-up in an elaborate plan to steal money, receipts and credit slips from the store.

Thomas, who was employed as a night maintenance man at the store said he let Ellison and the other suspects in the store just before Bee arrived, according to the statement of charges.

Bee arrived at the store with Bennett, who is employed as a day stock clerk at the store and Ellison was hiding between the aisles in the store, the court papers indicated.

Ellison, 21, is being held without bail. He confronted Bee and Bennett and forced the manager to lie on the floor of the men's room near the employee's lounge.

Ellison then allegedly forced Bee to open the store's safe, according to the papers.

The witness told police Thomas said that after the safe was opened "everything became quiet" and then there was a single shot. There was no mention of where the 3-year-old was when his father was shot.

K-Mart officials said Ellison was hired in July as a parttime stock clerk and was fired several weeks ago after a "misunderstanding" with another worker.

Thomas allegedly told the witness that as Bennett and Bee approached the hiding place, Thomas "became scared.

Part of the apparent plan was for Thomas to pretend to be an innocent victim who would be "knocked out." Thomas also said, "No one was supposed to be killed," according to the document.

No longer an angel

A 25-year-old Seattle man told the AFRO he was "stripped of his status as a Guardian Angel after New York Angel leaders read a story that appeared in the Nov. 3 edition of the AFRO.

But, Ike Jackson, commander of the Baltimore Angels chapter, told the AFRO Thursday, Adrian Parmely was not "stripped", but quit the organization about three weeks ago.

The controversy surrounding Parmely's status with the Angels, an anti-crime patrol founded in New York about two years ago, stems from Parmely's April 8, 1981 arrest on possession of deadly weapon charges.

The Angels did not arrive in Baltimore to establish a chapter here until mid-July.

Parmely was arrested after police received tips in the 1700 block of St. Paul St. and saw him standing near Christopher Rouse, 24, of the 1200 block of Patterson Park Ave., holding a 14-inch butcher knife.

According to a police report of the incident, Mira Swann, told police Rouse had attacked her in front of the house. Parmely lived at and that Parmely apparently responded to Ms. Swann's cries for help.

Parmely and his attorney, David Saltzman said Ms. Swann later declined to press charges against Rouse, who was arrested for common assault. However, the State Attorney's office is proceeding with plans to prosecute Parmely, Ms. Swann's rescuer, on deadly weapon charges.

It is a move both Parmely and Saltzman call "ironic."

Parmely visited the AFRO offices on Nov. 5 and said he received a call from New York the same day the article appeared. He said the Guardian Angels "stripped me of my colors because of the knife incident" and because it violated the group's posture its members be unarmed.

However, Jackson told the AFRO, Parmely, an "Angel in training" quit the group following an incident where Parmely threw his Angel T-shirt into a DC street. The incident was witnessed by Curtis Sliwa, founder of the Guardian Angels, Jackson said.

Parmely apparently was upset about something that happened prior to the D.C. incident and Parmely's actions were surprising.

"We thought he was going to be a very good Angel. He was devoted to the cause," Jackson said.

After the D.C. action, Parmely's attitude toward the Angels began to change, he said.

Police arrest two men on gun charges

Baltimore County Police said Tuesday they seized weapons and explosive powder from a car occupied by two men accused of shouting Ku Klux Klan slogans and trying to run over a black man.

James Leach told police he was standing by a car talking to friends Monday night in Edgemere when the car swerved in his direction. He said the men shouted Ku Klux Klan slogans.

Leach called police and officers stopped a car that matched his description.

A police spokesman said officers confiscated six pistols, two rifles, one air rifle and one pound of black explosive powder.

Police said Brian K. Rogers, 25, of Edgemere, an Army soldier stationed at Fort Meade, and Paul W. Spence, 27, also of Edgemere, were arrested and charged with handgun violations. Both were released on bail.

Assault charges are pending, police said.

Energy prices up in Baltimore

Energy prices in the Baltimore area rose 1.6 percent in September after two months of declines, the U. S. Bureau of Labor statistics reported.

September's price rise reflected higher residential gas prices, said Alvin I. Margulis, the bureau's regional commissioner.

Higher electricity prices also contributed to the latest increase, while home heating oil dipped and gasoline prices showed little change, he said.

Compared to 1980 levels, area energy prices were 10.8 percent higher in September, led by an increase of nearly 25 percent for fuel oil.

Residential gas prices soared 15.9 percent in September with local households using 100 therms charged $53.59 or $8.73 more than average gas prices nationwide. Compared to last year, residential gas was 24.1 percent more expensive in September.

Margulis said a 2 percent increase in electricity also contributed to higher energy prices. For 500 kilowatt hours of usage, area residents were charged $34.98 about $1.20 above the national average and 60 cents more than Washington customers were charged for similar service.

Home heating oil fell for the fifth consecutive month to an average price of $1.23 per gallon, he said. Washington heating oil customers paid higher prices, while Philadelphia consumers were charged less. Local prices were one and a half cents lower than the average for all U. S. cities.

Gasoline prices with a 0.1 percent gain last month, ended a five month decline and stood at levels 10.4 percent higher than last year per gallon prices at $1.41 were nearly 3 percent higher than the national average.

Leaded regular sold for slightly above $1.32 and unleaded regular was $1.38 per gallon.

Jan Matzeliger, a Black man from Dutch Guiana, invented a shoe-lasting machine in 1883 that revolutionized the shoe industry.
