MEMORIAL SERVICES FOR THE LATE W. W. BECK

Following is the personal eulogy read by Judge Lewin W. Wickes.

It is not often that the death of any one, no matter how distinguished causes so much general sorrow as the recent death of William W. Beck.

But when it is known, as we all know it, that he was a man of unusual personal attraction, one who by his cheerfulness, generosity, manliness and loyalty drew people very close to him, it is not to be wondered that he should leave behind him many grieving and sorrowing hearts.

In the social, business, professional and political life of this community, he has been a prominent figure since early manhood.

Upon his admission to the bar, he at once begun upon a successful career.

In the first few years he acquired the largest criminal practice which any member of this bar has enjoyed in my recollection and he soon became a skilled advocate in that branch of the law.

The State's Attorneys of those days I am sure will clearly recall the many masterful defenses he interposed to their prosecutions.

And he never lost a fondness for engaging in a legal battle in defense of a man's life or liberty.

During this period, Mr. Beck was steadily building up a civil practice which rapidly increased after he was elected State's Attorney, an office he held for eight years, and he was soon recognized as one of the leaders of the bar of this Circuit.

His legal attainments were of a high order. Finely grounded in the fundamental principles of law, a careful and diligent student, sound and discriminating judgment, safe and wise in counsel, always thoroughly prepared in the facts as well as the legal questions involved, and alert and resourceful at the trial table.

Mr. Beck begun to participate in active politices before he reached manhood. He was a Democrat from his first vote to his last.

He believed that government should be conducted by parties, not by individuals with no responsibility to any political element.

He believed in organization within the party, as the best means of accomplishing beneficial results and of keeping stable the structure of our institutions.

He naturally came into the State's Attorneyship which was in the line of his profession and his conduct of the office was marked by ability and fidelity to duty; but it was with some reluctance that he entered the broader field of politics by becoming a candidate for the State Senate in 1911, though few men were so well equipped by training, intelligence and real capability for the duties of that position and for taking a leading part in affairs of State.

He was elected and at once became an influential member of the Senate of 1912 and increased his influence in the session of 1914.

After serving with distinction in the legislative sessions of 1912 and 1914, in which he secured merited recognition for Kent County, when at the height of his mental and physical vigor, with a keen grasp and knowledge of the State's needs and resources, prominent in the counsels of his party, with the future bright with promise of brighter political preferment and after passing successfully through a bruising primary campaign and winning a renomination for the State Senate, he, with all of his colleagues on the ticket, save one, was defeated in the general election.

Such a result must have been a bitter disappointment. He never voiced that sentiment.

Instead, without malice or vindictiveness, with a buoyant spirit and the sturdy manhood that was in him, he immediately directed his efforts to the reinstatement of his party.

The result of his efforts is history and the last years of his life were brightened by the knowledge that he had performed a wonderful, and he hoped an enduring, service to his party and the people of his county.

When he was in the Senate in 1914, the State Tax Commission of Maryland was created and the membership of the first commission was included in the Act. At the expiration of the terms of the commissioners fixed in the Act, their successors were to be appointed by the Governor.

Mr. Beck suggested my name, much to my surprise, as one of the original commissioners and I was designated to serve four years from the 1st of June 1914.

In the winter of 1918, I informed the Governor that I would not apply for reappointment at the expiration of my time and, without conferring with Mr. Beck, who had no intimation of my purpose, I proposed him as my successor.

He was appointed and occupied that position from the first of June 1918 until his death, having in the meantime been appointed chairman when Senator Gorman died.

The requirements of that office are arduous and exacting. It concerns the most sensitive department of government, that of taxation, where every one is more or less affected.

Mr. Beck performed his duties and bore the responsibilities with characteristic ability and discernment. And through most of this time suffering from impaired health, which he bore with plendid courage, he set an example for faithfulness and efficient service which may well be emulated by all public officials.

Public office has its fascinations—the doing things in a big way, contact with people of standing and position, consciousness of taking part in the business of the State, are all gratifying and attractive.

I have reason to believe, however that Mr. Beck preferred his home and his country law practice, for he was very fond of the law, to the honors of public position. He wanted to be near his old associates and to feel the warm companionship which had been so much a part of his life. He frequently expressed regret that he was unable to see more of his home people.

His life was cut off in its usefulness and he will be greatly missed.

The State has lost a valuable and efficient public servant.

The party of his choice has lost a safe and wise counsellor.

Kent County has lost a citizen whose energies were always on the side of progress and betterment.

The Bar has lost a leading member who upheld and maintained the best traditions and purist ethics of our great profession.

His family has lost a devoted husband, father and brother.

I, personally, have lost a dear friend and the sweet memory of our long and intimate relations will live with me as long as life lasts.
