Rat rub out in danger

By Rebecca Kolberg

Baltimore (UPI) - The city's rat population — estimated to be one for every urban dweller — may soar unless citizens pitch in to ease the impact of federal budget cuts, the head of the Rat Rub Out Program said Tuesday.

Donna Johnson said the future of the rat fighting program will be in doubt when a $300,000 grant from the center for disease control runs out on Nov. 30.

Rat Rub Out's federal funding will be part of the State Department of Health and Mental Hygiene's block grant, which is expected to be at least 25 percent below last year's level.

"It's not just that rats are filthy and live on filth. They have a direct impact on our pocketbooks," Ms. Johnson said in explaining why the city needs to continue the massive rat prevention and extermination program it launched 11 years ago.

Last year, 23 people in Baltimore were bitten by rats. Rat Rub Out recieved more than 50,000 complaints and "wherever rats live, they carry disease and a certain number of people are bitten by rats each year. They contaminate millions and millions of dollars worth of food every year," Ms. Johnson said.

"Rats also are costly to us because there are a large number of fires caused by rats gnawing on electrical wire," she said.

Rat Rub Out's latest budget reductions follow cuts in the CETA program, which last summer trimmed 15 workers from the staff, forcing the program to stop its door-to-door inspection and clean-up campaigns in key neighborhoods.

Ms. Johnson said the anti-rat program must compete with other city programs under the block grant system. Rat Rub Out is counting on community groups to pass information among their neighbors and stage local cleanups.

VANDAL PROOF THIS TIME? — Richard Boyd works to put the finishing touches on a plaque honoring Alex Haley's ancestor, Kunta Kinte, in Annapolis. The plaque is mounted in stone and is a replacement for one that was dumped in the harbor by vandals shortly after it was dedicated earlier this year.

Maryland Institute to hold student Portfolio Day

A portfolio day for secondary students and other individuals considering an education in the visual arts will be hosted by the Maryland Institute, College of Art, Sunday, December 13 from 12:00 to 4 p.m. Representatives from more than 30 leading art colleges all over the country will present to review portfolios of student work. They will also provide specific information on the art programs offered at their institutions, careers in art, admissions procedures and financial aid possibilities. Parents, art teachers and friends are welcome in addition to potential art students. Unique opportunities are offered by Portfolio Day as Barbara Miller, Dean of Admissions and Continuing Studels explains: "In all of the tests designed to identify the strengths of high school seniors, none have addressed themselves to the visually oriented student. Students who excel in two and three dimensional expression as opposed to verbal expression rarely enjoy a universal acknowledgment of their skills or receive the necessary support and guidance needed to encourage their educational goals in the visual arts. 'Portfolio Day brings together many of the leading U. S. Colleges offering programs in the fine and applied arts. In reviewing the portfolios with samples of the students' work, the college representatives will counsel, encourage and acknowledge the efforts of high school interested in developing their abilities to express themselves visually," said Ms. Miller. In addition to the Maryland Institute, College of Art, Portfolio day will include representatives from Alfred University, Art Academy of Cincinnati, Atlanta College of Art, Beaver College, California College of Arts and Crafts, California Institute of the Arts, Center for Creative Studies, Cleveland Institute of Art, Columbus College of Art and Design, Corcoran School of Art, Hartford Art School, Kansas City Art Institute, Maryland College of Art and Design and Memphis Academy of Art.

Other portfolio day participants are Minneapolis College of Art and Design, Moore College of Art, Otis Art Institute, Parsons School of Design, Philadelphia College of Art, Portland School of Art, Pratt Institute, Rhode Island College, Ringling School of Art, Rochester Institute of Technology, San Francisco Art Institute, School of Visual Arts, Swain School of Design, Syracuse University, Tyler School of Art, University of Michigan and Washington University. The sign in information center for Portfolio Day is located in the Fox building across the street from the Maryland Institute's main building on 1300 West Mount Royal Ave.,

CCC has special real estate class

People interested in launching a career as a real estate salesperson can obtain the necessary training to sit for the state exam for licensing at a special course being offered by Catonsville Community College.

"Maryland Real Estate Practices and Principles for Salespeopse" will be held five days a week from Monday, Nov. 30 to Thursday, Dec. 17, 9 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. each day.

Classes will be held on the CCC main campus, 800 S. Rolling Road. The tuition is $65. Students completing this course will be eligible to sit for their examination Saturday, Dec. 19.

Coordinator of the Real Estate program at CCC, Jack Rodgers notes that while the real estate market is in a decline now, professionals in the field feel that the need for qualified people will be strong when the market recovers. "Now is a good time to train," said Rogers, "so you can be ready when the market picks up again. Selling real estate has always been a rewarding, productive career."

To register for the course call the office of continuing education at 455-4318.
