'Young Doctors In Love'

The hallway of City Hospital looks ordinary enough, until you sense that the walls are painted with odd combinations of ice cream parlor colors, and there are goldfish in one of the I.V. bottles, and there's a candy striper and an orderly cuddling under a sheet on a gurney.

There's no question that love is in the air; doctors with doctors, nurses with doctors, patients with nurses, and so on. And the complications of these romantic trysts make daytime television soaps look like child's play.

This hospitable hospital — where you see no blood, and the only real injury is a broken heart — could exist only in ABC Motion Pictures' new comedy "Young Doctors In Love," released through 20th Century Fox.

Under the guidance of one of the proven masters of comedy, Garry Marshall, "Young Doctors In Love" finds its humor in the sly parodying of all the hospital - oriented movies and television shows from early episodes in the lives of shows like "Ben Casey" and "Young Dr. Kildare" right up to enormously popular daytime soap opera, "General Hospital."

The in and out patient antics are heavily laced by director Marshall and by screenplay writers Michael Elias and Rich Eustis with energetic visual jokes.

Dr. Copper (Richard Dysart) is attacked by the "Thing."
