NEWS OF LOCAL HATCHERIES

Hundreds Of Thousands Of Baby Chicks Have Been Hatched Near Chestertown, Going To Kent Farms And Far-Off Places

The season just closed has been a most successful one for the local hatcheries, namely, the Queen Anne Poultry Farm, the Bramble Poultry Farm, of Queen Anne's, near town, and Mr. Roland B. Day's hatchery in Quaker Neck, Kent county. Thousands of day-old chicks have gone out from them to Kent county farms and also to parts of Maryland and the country in general. The baby chick business has gone forward with giant strides during the past few years, replacing mother hen, and raising the chicken business from a side-issue to a larger part in the life of the agriculturist.

Mr. Watson, president of the American Incubator Manufacturing Co., was in Chestertown Wednesday on business. Mr. Watson is the original inventor of the mammoth incubator and has done a great deal toward developing the hatching and chicken business in this section.

The hatchery at the Queen Anne's Poultry Farm closed down for the season Wednesday, after being in operation since January. It has had a most successful season, and has hatched out between 300,000 and 400,000 chicks during the past season, many of which have been shipped by parcels post. This firm will greatly increase their hatching capacity for next year.

The Bramble Poultry Farm began the erection of a 32x24 addition to their incubator house this week, with Mr. Albert Rawleigh in charge of the work. They have also purchased a new incubator of about 14,000 capacity which greatly increases their hatching capacity. This hatchery started their incubators the first part of January and still have several thousand eggs in the course of incubation. The bulk of their orders went to customers in Maryland and Delaware.
