"CROSSED WIRES"

Prize-Winning Comedy-Drama

New York prides itself on controlling all the plays that are produced in America. It looks them over first, and when it is through with them it lets the rest of the country have a look at them. But for once the rest of the country has turned the tables. "Crossed Wires," the winner of the Chautauqua Prize Play Contest, which will be seen here as a regular part of the Chautauqua program cannot be produced on Broadway, according to the terms of the contest, until after it has been played all summer over the Chautauqua circuits.

A year ago the leaders of the Chautauqua movement got together and decided that Chautauqua was big enough and good enough to have its own plays and not use Broadway's cast-offs. They therefore decided to offer a prize of $3,000 for an original play of American life written by an American author. More than 300 plays were submitted, and after careful reading of them all by the judges, "Crossed Wires" was selected as the winner of the prize. It was produced by a competent cast and presented before a large audience of critics before the opening of the Chautauqua season. It proved to be an overwhelming success and just what was wanted for production as the Chautauqua play.

The author of the winning play is Richard A. Purdy who is the author of several other plays and poems. A poem of his entitled "The Day" was published during the war and was much discussed in literary and patriotic circles, being classed with "In Flanders Fields" as one of the best poems written during the war.

In "Crossed Wires" Mr. Purdy tells a story that comes into the actual experience of many American boys. His principal characters are two boys with ambition. One of them wants to be a newspaper editor, but instead is forced to run the dry goods business which his father started. The other wants to be a dry goods merchant, but finds himself forced by his father into being a newspaper man. They realize that they are "Crossed Wires" and make up their minds that they will get the wires uncrossed so that they work. How they go about accomplishing their purpose forms a story that is full of laughable situations and amusing characters from beginning to end. Incidentally they both find that life is not complete without romance, and before the final curtain falls, wedding bells are in the air for two happy couples.

POULTRY NOTES

Items Of Interest That Will Interest Our Poultry Raisers

No need for Kent poultry raisers to send to New Jersey, Pennsylvania and western hatcheries for chicks next winter and spring. The Queen Anne Poultry Farm and the Bramble Poultry Farm have sufficient capacity to hatch every chick that will be needed in this section of the country. Both have enlarged their hatcheries, which are as efficiently equipped and as well handled as any in the country.

A man claims to have raised seven pullets, five of which laid over 300 eggs each in a year. That may have been the statement of a truthful man, but it would take official trapnesting to make us believe it.

Recently the Dominion of Canada Department of Agriculture officially sanctioned the registration of poultry, thus, for the first time in any country, placing registered hens on the same plane as registered cows or hogs of any kind of stock. Fowls to be eligible must have laid at least 200 eggs, averaging 24 ounces to the dozen, in an official government-supervised contest, within 52 consecutive weeks. 398 hens made records last year entitling them to be registered. Seven breeds were in the list.

He who culls and culls away,
May live to have his chickens pay!

Make your selection for breeding stock now. It is, of course essential that you set aside a larger number of cockerels than you will need as some are bound to turn out badly. The more painstaking your selection the better results you will have when the hatching season is on.

Thanks to demonstrations at poultry meetings and the like, to the official visits of farm experts to the farms of the country, and to the poultry press, it is not difficult to cull your flocks. The characteristics displayed by good hens and bad ones are now well known to almost every poultrymen.

Give your pullets every chance to make good birds—plenty of feed, exercise, water, etc. The better you treat them, the better they will pay you.

There seems to have been this season about the same number of complaints of deaths among half grown chicks as for two years past. While in a few instances where the complainants jumped to the conclusion that the ready mixed growing mash was responsible for the deaths and hence acted accordingly, we have our doubt that this was the cause. What is the cause of perfectly healthy, half grown pullets suddenly dying is a proposition hard to figure out. One year we go through the season without having lost hardly a nicely developed bird, then we have the reverse condition. It happens to all poultrymen. If we observe all sanitary conditions, feed correctly and house correctly and give them the attention, it is all that we can do.

The Oklahoma Experiment Station seems to have recently discovered that that the larvae of house flies feeding in poultry manure become the intermediary hosts of the common chicken tapeworm. Chickens become infested by eating these larvae or the adult flies hatched from the infected larvae. This discovery, if substantiated, offers a common sense means of control. Droppings must not be allowed to accumulate where flies have access to them. It sounds easy, don't it? We will leave it up to the reader to figure out how it can be done.

Two poultry complaints, say specialists on the subject at the Ohio State University, are cutting into the profits farms might make from hens. The first is a disease, they say, and the second is a mistake in flock management. Coccidiosis, the disease, is killing young chicks by the thousands. The second trouble is called "hollercraw." When summer comes on and eggs are cheap, people say they can't afford to feed mash and the flock is left to feed on bugs, worms, grass and such grain as can be picked up. Chickens thus left to themselves seldom flourish.
