ROME AGAINST ATHENS?
From New York Evening Post

Oh, are we come to this? While yet the world
Staggers with dragging steps from the abyss,
Must we now seek this darkest precipice.
Must we yet see these battle-flags unfurled
Rome against Athens! Then indeed were hurled
Into the mire the breath of beauty's kiss,
Sweet with old song, old art, far mysteries
Within whose soul the old world lies impearled.
Ah, Italy, crown not our brows with shame,
We who have lost so much, who are so poor
In armory of faith, of wisdom, claim
For Homer's land respect on Virgili's shore.
Let Rome and Athens still hand on the flame,
Let Beauty strengthen more and ever more.

POULTRY NOTES

ITEMS THAT WILL INTEREST OUR MANY POULTRYMEN

Why keep that string of late-hatched poorly developed cockerals is around the yards Such males will never be of value for breeders, and males not worthy to be bred from have no place around a poultry yard of the keeping type. Their place is in the pot, or in the crate for market. Keep only cockerals that are well developed, husky individuals, and only enough for your own breeding purposes unless you have or are likely to have a demand for breeding stock. Never save old males for breeders unless they have proved worthy breeders. Put this extra feed into your hens and pullets for a few extra winter eggs. Swat the rooster.

Now is the time to cull your hens to select breeders and get rid of the "slacker hen." For breeders never select small, undersized, or too large, extra beefy type hens. Look to the females to influence the type in the offspring, because this is what usually happens.

Select hens of good average size. (See American Standard of Perfection for weights of various breeds) Hens having a broad skull, well developed, but not beefy comb, wattles and ear lobes and not too long a head or beak are desireable. Also the eyes should be prominent, and in the better individuals the eyes should be both at the same time from one position when viewed from the rear of the head. This is especially true of the smaller breeds. These factors are indicative of health and vitality, which are so essential to good breeding stock. Breeding hens should have good spring of ribs, well rounded underneath the wings, and should not be flat at the sides. The back at the base of tail should be broad with the breadth carreid well back to rear. Body deep, legs and toes straight, free from any defect, and toe nails well worn off.

Hens of this type will make the best breeders as well as egg producers for another year.

Winter is coming. Eggs are going to be high in price. Now is the time to look after the pullets to see that they start the winter right. First of all, the pullets should have been hatched early enough to be well developed at this time. To make high producers, the pullets must not only have goodbody frames, but must also be in good condition with plenty of reserve fat. If your pullets are not puite ready to lay, see that they get sufficient corn, wheat, etc. to put them in good flesh before commencing production.

If your pullets are not in good flesh when they commence production, do not be surprised if they molt early next summer or possibly about December or January. Heavy production in late summer will also cause partial molt in winter and early summer molt to some extent. Pullets take on flesh readily at this season and more efficiently than earlier. That is why most of our high producers commence production in October or November, rather than August or early September.

Pullets now laying or commencing to lay are better off in the laying house than on range. Pullets 5½ months old for the smaller breeds and and 6-6½ for the general purpose breeds may reasonably be expected to commence production at this time.

If you want winter eggs, prepare now to get them. Feed liberally.

The pendulum swings in the poultry business as well as in any other line of human endeavor. The heavy breeds have been sitting on the bench comparatively for some time past. We all have to admit that the little three-and-a-half pound leghorn has been holding the center of the stage for several years. But now the heavy chicken is coming back and demanding recognition. And that's the way it goes.

Poultrymen ought to be as wise as the cold storage men. They gather eggs by millions when prices are at the lowest point and then hold them until they can realize the largest profit on them. Can you blame them. They help to make the chicken business possible by doing it. Why are not our poultrymen equally shrewd and enterprising? We can at least preserve enough for our own use. There ought to be strong production all during the summer and for that reason the prices are low. Many people are keeping eggs well in water glass, but only on a small scale for family use. There has been talk of a cold storage plant here. Sometime perhaps there will be and then our poultrymen will get the full benefit from their flocks.

Like all other business enterprises, the poultry business has its worries. Some people worry too much over everything. Emerson said: "The mass of men worry themselves into nameless graves, while here and there a great unselfish soul forgets itself into immortality."

Cull your flocks down to just what you want to keep for breeders next year, and layers this winter. Don't put it off.

The farm poultry flock has been and always will be a source of profit to the farmer. It is the one part of agriculture that pays. If our farmers will prepare now for early birds next season they will make a good thing out of it. The earlier you get your birds out next spring or winter, the more you will make, providing you are prepared to raise them at that time.

WHY SUFFER SO.

Why suffer from a bad back, from sharp, shooting twinges, headaches, dizziness and distressing urinary ills? Chestertown people recommend Doan's Kidney Pills. Could you ask for stronger proof of merit? Ask your neighbor!

Mrs. Bertie Crouch, 11 S. College Ave., Chestertown, says: "I can recommend Doan's Kidney Pills as a reliable remody. I had lumbago and such a miserable aching across my back, I wasn't able to be on my feet a great deal of the time. There was no let-up day or night to my suffering. Headaches almost drove me frantic and my head swam with dizzy spells. The action of my kidneys was irregular. I used Doan's Kidney Pills from Hudson's Grocery and they quickly stopped the acnes and pains and I could do my work without suffering."

Price 60c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. Crouch had. Foster-Milburn Co., Mfrs., Buffalo, N. Y.

"STANDARD"
The Balanced Gasoline

You can't dodge it

—the principle of balance. It is universal. From the beginning of time, practically everything that man has invented has afterwards been improved by getting a finer balance of parts or constituents.

That is the way we have improved gasoline and the performance that it will give. A certain proportion of low-boiling constituents for better, quick, surer starting. A certain proportion of high-boiling constituents for better power and mileage. A certain proportion of intermediate constituents for better acceleration and snappier pick-up.

That is what "Standard" has. The proportion, or balance, is everything. "Standard" has it. It is the better gasoline—all ways.
