FARM NOTES

ITEMS WHICH PERTAIN TO FARMING AND FARM LIFE WHICH WILL BE WORTH READING BY OUR AGRICULTURISTS

The heavy rains of the past two weeks, with the additional amount of water caused by the snow, have made Kent land a veritable pond in places and it will be several weeks before the ground will be fit for spring plowing.

Only the most efficient hog raisers can now see any profits in the present, and most of these must needs be situated in strategic pork-producing areas that are particularly well adapted to the cheap production of hogs. This is usually in the areas where corn or other grains are relatively low-priced and where freight rates favor the conversion of these grains into pork. Such an area is represented in the territory about that common hub on the map around which Iowa, Minnesota, South Dakota and Nebraska would whirl if started to revoving. But even in this favored section many of the less-favored producers are now taking their losses. The cotton country of the great South-east is relatively light on hogs as compared with the Corn Belt, and that is now fortunate. With the cotton price looking up, the South will go easy on more hogs and will buy much from the corn country as they are now doing. For the present this is mutually helpful.

There is one particular trait of human nature in some of us that is hard to explain. Allusion is made to those individuals who are usually intelligent as men go, but who prefer to go it alone—as their fathers did—and wherever possible profit by the advantageous situation brought about by common endeavor of their neighbors. For example: The existence of a co-operative marketing County Sheep Growers' Association in a county, does, beyond a doubt, stimulate local wool buyers to bid up to their limit for wool; certainly much higher than they otherwise would bid were it not for the competition.

When you burn bones you drive away all the nitrogen. You have left in the ashes a good quality of phosphorus and lime. There is practically no potash in the bone. By driving off the nitrogen you lose about half the fertilizing value of these bones, but the cost of reducing them in other ways is generally so heavy that it is almost impossible to carry out that work in ordinary farm practice. The best way would be to crush these bones in a bone grinder; that gives a form of bone meal which makes excellent fertilizer. A very strong mill and heavy power is required to do this work. The manufacturers often smash or crush the bones and then treat them with sulphuric acid to make them available.

Some of our readers talk about a cover crop for the orchard, but they seem to have the wrong idea of just what this means. The real cover crop means both cultivation and cropping. For instance, the ground is plowed early in the Spring and kept well stirred up through the Summer with some kind of cultivator. Then about the middle of June or a little later crop is seeded to hold the ground during the rest of the Summer and the Fall. All sorts of crops are suggested for this purpose. Some growers use a combination of rye and clover. Others find buckwheat and clover very satisfactory. We know of several cases where people put in a combination of Timothy and Red-top; still others use rape and clover or turnip and clover. The object is to have some crop growing through the late Summer and Fall, so as to give organic matter which may be plowed into the soil the following year. A cover crop holds the ground and prevents washing in case of late rain. It also causes the trees to ripen their wood earlier, and usually gives a little better color and quicker ripening to the fruit. Another advantage is, with such a crop growing in late Summer, it prevents the loss of nitrates from the soil. The use of oats, barley or clover seed in the early Spring would not be as satisfactory, as it would not be possible with such a crop to give the early culture which most of our orchards require. Early plowing and cultivation up to the middle of June, and then the cover crop, is a standard plan for handling the orchard. Rural New Yorker.

More farmers should know the value there is in Soy beans. Not only do they add nitrogen to the soil, but they are a paying seed crop and a good feed. There is not a thing in the way of live stock on the farm that will not eat them.

We have been growing Soy beans for the last eight years and find there is no secret connected with their successful culture. They will grow profitably on any soil that produces average crops of corn, oats, potatoes and the like—yes, on soil too poor to produce profitable returns in these crops. Soil preparing should begin early in Spring, although planting need not be done until after corn is planted. By preparing the soil early and keeping it harrowed as often as the young weeds show above the soil surface, all weed seeds within the top few inches of the soil will be killed, so that keeping the beans clean of weeds later on will be greatly facilitated.
