THE LAST ROAD

By Grantland Rice.

Tell me, O prophet of the Hidden Mist,
When I have found the road that wanders far
Where all great rovers hold an endless tryst
That leads from world to world, from star to star,
Shall I step out, unshaking, through the dark
As I have hoped I would—to take my chance
As one who loved the blue sea might embark
For unknown ports of glory and romance?

Lights out—then darkness for a step or two
Until we find firm space on which to tread,
Seeking an exit where the light breaks through
To show the open road that waits ahead—
The music fades and dies the last bells chime—
And some guide beckons out beyond the walls
Where the raw soul looks out upon all Time
To follow where the great adventure calls.

Poultry Notes

Oh, June, the month of roses,
We welcome you again;
How sweet your soft warm breezes
That follow Springtime's rain.
How beautiful the flowers
That makes the fields so bright;
How gentle shines the silver moon
To fill our night with light.

June is a great month for chicks. The weather is more settled; the air is warm; you have a good chance for success, especially if you are raising chicks in coops on lawns and in yards.

Rose bugs have arrived in Kent County. They will kill chicks that are from two weeks to four months old. Many have been lost this way in past years. The only way to prevent this loss is to keep the chicks away from the bugs; if necessary, keep them confined.

Many families part with or destroy enough scraps from the table and kitchen, to maintain two dozen fowls almost exclusively upon the waste of the household. A very small and cheap house will suffice for the comforts of a few hens.

Warm weather care for the growing stock is very exacting if best results are desired. Besides supplying a variety of food close observation is necessary to avoid lice and every improper condition that may handicap their growth and health.

June hatched chicks are a profitable crop in most all sections of our country. Up in this section we look to our June hatched chicks for at least part of our December and January show birds. They usually, in the parti-colored varities, excell in color quality.

While it is true that some breeds do not lay quite so many eggs per year as some others, the difference is pretty well balanced in value by the size and weight of the others that sell better as fowls and weigh more as individuals. Consider all and is is about six and six between all breeds and varities. All are a paying proposition.

Kent farm women are now turning out their turkeys and are experiencing the usual loss. The Bramble Poultry Farm is hatching 100 turkey eggs in their incubators for a customer.

Reds are becoming more popular in Kent; so are Rocks and White Leghorns. The poultry industry is decidely on the increase in Kent.

Animals in general and fowls in particular are most agreeable friends. Keep their friendliness by looking well after their wants.

All those who have much to do with pure bred poultry know that the interest in the pure breeds is rapidly increasing every year, and much faster now than ever before, and is consequently more noticeable.

Trapnests will very soon point out to you your boarding and dead-head hens, increase your production and show you the right way to real poultry results.

¶These rates are clearly necessary to enable the company to continue to provide the public in the State of Maryland with an efficient telephone service and to attract the additional capital required to provide for extensions and betterments to meet the growing demands of the public in an adequate manner.
