Poultry Notes

ITEMS THAT WILL INTEREST OUR READERS EVERYWHERE

Give your pullets every opportunity to develop and grow properly. The most important thing which every poultryman has to do during the summer months is to insure that his pullet flocks get every chance to grow well and mature at the proper time in the fall. Important it is, because upon the growth and futurity of tihs winter's generation of layers will depend in large part their health and the eggs production wihch they are able to make the coming fall and winter.

Those of you are growing the heavy-breed pullets, such as the Barred Plymouth Rocks, Rhode Island Reds and White Wyandottes, a four or five foot fence will readily turn them and they will not be a nuisance getting over into your neighbor's or your garden patch, but if you keep Anconas, Legnorns or lighter Mediterranean breeds when they get about half grown they become possessed of the desire to go in searcn of food far afield and no fence is tall enough to hold them. So it has become a common practice to prevent this flight and keep the birds on the ground and in the yards where they belong by going over the pullets, individually, and clipping one wing.

This is done by using a pair of sharp scissors and cutting the outer primary flight feathers on one wing only, leaving the quills about one inch long. Cutting in much closer than this will cause bleeding, but cutting as above described will absolutely prevent the birds leaving theground in any well-directed flight to get over a fence or an obstruction and will eliminate the nuisance which they occasion by so doing.

We do not know of any home recreation that is so suitable or agreeable to the young of either sex as raising and tending a few poultry pets. The pleasure, the labor and the care, consequent upon the keeping of choice fowls embody a vast amount of useful knowledge, industrial tact, and health-giving enjoyment.

Sameness and hardiness of character can only be obtained by a long period of close and careful breeding. The time given to the establishment of any one of the leading varieties of fowls involves the expenditure of much money and valuable time of men, educated in the many complex laws governing the breeder's art. All the Standard varieties of today are the results of some well laid plan, directed to the development of certain characteristics of economy or beauty. The chances of producing an even strain or variety by selection from mongrels would be a tedious task that a life-time of man might not avail any superiority over the parent fowl, for as the commencement would begin with blood of various characters, so would be the ending of any such experiment.

Don't forget your poultry houses and allow lice to get ahead of you.

Prepare for your flocks next winter and spring by getting good cockerels for breeding. Too much importance cansot be paid to this feature of the poultry business.

—Decorations for Maryland road signs are nearly completed and will be erected within the next few weeks, according to John N. Mackall, Director of Public Works, who recently held a contest to obtain thebest design. The winning design was submitted by Miss Elizabeth C. Molter, of Steverna Park, and consisted of a ship with sails, bearing the Maryland coat of arms. The ornaments are to be placed on 300 signs that mark the State highways. Several are to be placed on the more conspicuous road signs of Kent and Queen Anne's county.

Maryland Press Association To Meet.

The Maryland Press Association will meet at Havre de Grace, Md., Monday, September 15, and its officers have extended an invitation to the Del-Mar-Va Press Association to join them. The newspaper men will spend sometime at the Aberdeen Proving Grounds and will be given an opportunity to take airplane trips and participate in other novel ventures.

In the evening dinner will be served at Hotel Bayou, by the Havre de Grace Chamber of Commerce. Govenor Ritchie has accepted an invitation to attend. NO RATS OR ROACHES REACH THIS CABINET

Alabama Women Inspired by Home Demonstration Club.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Because she liked carpentry, and needed an inexpensive kitchen cabinet, Mrs. M. C. Leavelle of Buhl, Ala., decided to make one for herself. Her husband became interested and assisted her, she states in a letter to the United States Department of Agriculture, adding that the inspiration for making the cabinet, as well as other kitchen improvements, came from the home demonstration club and county home demonstration agent.

"The dimensions of the cabinet," says Mrs. Leavelle, "are 6½ feet high, 46 inches wide and 2 feet thick. It consists of one large drawer and two medium-sized drawers in the bottom section. Over this section is the table 46 inches long by 27 inches wide, which is covered with white oilcloth. The top section consists of one long box on the left side for flour and sugar, a dish closet and two small drawers on the right side. The lumber I used is poplar, which came from our farm. The doors of the top section are made of screen wire. The total cost, including wire, latches, hinges and oilcloth, did not exceed $10. The tools used in making the cabinet were a hand saw, hammer and draw-knife. My cabinet has a double advantage over many I have seen in that it is rat-proof and roach-proof."

Cabinet Is Rat and Roach-Proof.

With her husband's assistance Mrs. Leavelle has added to their home, since joining the Home Demonstration club, a kitchen sink made of wood and lined with sheet iron, a barrel for a water tank, a fireless cooker, a baby bed and a library table. The making of these articles has saved them money and Mrs. Leavelle is very proud of them.
