IN MEMORIAM

Of our father and grandfather John Guilkey.

He is not dead, this man we loved so well,
He's just gone home a little while before
Here is the room where he was wont to dwell—
The cheery fire, the friendly open door,
So often has he held it so, flung wide,
With hands outstretched and kindly face aglow
We like to think he'll welcome us inside
The gates of hope, when it's our turn to go.

He loved the earth and all the common things—
The little farms, where lamps shine out at night;
The rest and peace each hush of evening brings,
Spring orchards and plain folks, and lantern light,
His feet the ways of right have ever trod—
It is not strange his pathway led to God!

—By his daughter Matilda and Grand Children.

Poultry Notes

Items That will Interest Our Poultry Readers Here and There

Obtain uniformity in your flock, make your birds carry your ear-marks as a breeder. Uniformity is essential these days, if your strain of fowls are to become known and a consequent demand created for them, and the same fact is true if you are to progress with but a few fowls kept for your pleasure alone. Conceive a mental picture of both the type and color, and the color markings which you hope to obtain. You must have the type you consider ideal and the shade and kind of color which you believe fits the variety. If you do not have such an ideal in your mind's eye you will be constantly groping in the dark.

It is only within recent years that the poultry industry has been given adequate recognition. The industry has expanded rapidly during the last five years, due principally to the advent of the competitive egg laying contests, successful culling demonstrations, successful colony brooding, artificial lights, large scale incubation and refrigeration, and the adoption of newer ideas in poultry feeding. It seems that the poultry industry has been more thoroughly developed at the present time than any other line of animal industry. More people are engaged in the production of poultry than any other kind of live stock. This interest in to the fact that it is a pleasant occupation, well adapted to wide range of climatic conditions, and that it may be established and conducted with a small initial outlay of capital.

How to get good hatches is one of the most important points in attaining success in keeping poultry. It does not matter how good the stock may be or how strong in vitality the eggs are, unless the breeder understands and practices some of the necessary precautions. Good hatches cannot be secured when either hens or incubators are used. Hundreds of incubators have been condemned when the operators were solely at fault and many a clutch of eggs has failed to hatch well because a hen was not given a proper chance to bring off a brood. A writer in "The Journal of Agriculture" makes some good points in discussing this matter which are worthy of careful consideration even by those who have had considerable experience. A good hatch depends upon the breeding of the parent stock, their proper incubation and their growth before the laying of the eggs which are to be incubated. Breeding stock should have been well hatched and well raised. The growth should have been constant, no overflesh or extreme thinness at any time.

Sports of the Week

Washington College Wins Gruelling Basketball Contest From Loyola 21-20—Two State Games AWay From Home Next Week

Playing before a crowd of about seven hundred, by far the largest crowd that ever witnessed a basketball game on an Eastern Shore basketball floor, and only approached once on Washington floor, the game being with Loyola before the World War, Washington College and Loyola College engaged in one of most gruelling athletic contests ever seen on any floor in which Coach Kibler's great basketball aggregation came through with colors flying, the final count being 21 to 20.

The game was a hurricane battle from the start, with Washington holding the master hand at all stages in the contest with the exception of the first few minutes of the contest, when, what was called a foul by the referee resulted in a two-point gift for Loyola, coupled with a hair-rasing goal, the result of basketball of a high order, and, while Loyola was ever at the heels of the Collegians, they never seriously threatened to be the leaders in points at the final whistle, with the exception of the last few minutes, when several long shots, more the result of luck than judgment or skill, resulted in the piling up of four points, which placed them near the mark that had been set by Washington, and who seemed satisfied to rest their scoring with this mark.

The refereeing was of a calibre that has received hearty condemnation from all sides. This is a community that absolutely demands a fair deal, not only for the home team, but, more so, for the visitors, and when a referee is "off" in his decisions as to fouls, throw-outs, jumps, etc., our people are quick to see his errors. In a close game any man is liable to make mistakes, and the referee's errors were costly ones for Washington, easily slowing them by five to eight points. His work seemed to be particularly bad in regards to the possession of the ball, calling for jumps when the ball was plainly in the possession of Washington.

McGran, a star guard, was out of the game before the first half was over from four personal fouls, and this sent a chill of dread through the spectators who realize what a tremendous asset to the team is McGran. That sturdy athlete of the gridiron, Cavanaugh, who for four years has been instrumental in keeping Washington on the football map, and who a year ago, sent a ball between St. John's posts from the 50-yard mark defeating them at a moment when they thought they had more than an even chance for victory, went in McGran's place and did work that stamps him as a man of ability on the floor. Shortly after the first half ended, Dumschott, a star forward, went from the floor on four personal fouls for the first time in his long career on the floor, and on a play that was about as much of a foul as the writer is a king of an isle in the South Seas. With his departure from the game, a groan of dismay went up and Washington's hopes were dimming. But McAuliffe, who succeeded Dumschott, showed the fine mettle in him the instant he flashed his slender form upon the floor, and, in an instant had become a menance to Loyola which became towering as the game progressed.

Carroll, becoming exhausted from almost as many boils as Job had when he received the famous admonition from his wife, and the fearful strain of the game that was being played, couple with the fearful pounding he had received as the center of attack from the Navy's rough-house tactics, was throwing into the attack every bit of skill, every pound of strength, and every trick of the sagacious that years of experience on the floor has given him, but he was plainly wobbling. Fiore, perhaps the outstanding star of the year, who had made as many points as any man on the team that night, was also on the defensive. Cavtain Bankert, playing like one possessed, was nevertheless off in his shooting while the powerful Cavanaugh was throwing backing the Loyola forwards like some colossal breastwork throws back the onrushing and devastating waves of the sea. Then into the arena flashed the almost unknown McAuliffe, like Blucher at Waterloo, just in time to play a role that was most important for his team's success. His freshness seemed suddenly to inspire his team, as he flashed in and out among the astounded Loyola team, and, before they knew what had happened, McAuliffe whipped the ball from their possession, it flashed into the hands of Carroll and the masterful blonde from Waterbury, from beyond the foul line caged the ball. And it was necessary that he did this, as it later proved.

The game was marked throughout by skillful playing and many shots were made from beyond the foul line, while each team wasted many chances for points on attempts from the foul line.

Washington was ahead at half-time, ahead at the finish, and ahead almost all the time in fact but they had to play with every bit of skill and strength that the Navy game had left them.

Duquesne University, of Pittsburgh, played Washington here last night. The game, was, no doubt a great one. Washington had had time to rest but Carroll is in bad shape from boils. Duquesne played Navy Wednesday night, Loyola Thursday night and it will be easy to get a line on them. They should however be somewhat tired out by the time Washington plays them. This will, perhaps, be more than over-balanced by Carroll's and Fiore's poor condition. If W. C. is beaten on the home floor this year, Duquesne should do it.

Next week will be a big week for a state games. Washington will play Mt. St. Mary's at Emmitsburg on Feb. 3, and Western Maryland College at Westminster on Feb. 4.

The Chestertown High School Basket Ball team and Middletown Basketball team played a hard-fought game prior to the Loyola game Saturday night. Middletown won by the margin of one goal.

Income Tax Has Never Had Great Popularity

Imaginative persons seem never to tire of conjecturing as to which of modern man's accomplishments would most astound our ancestors.

The motorcar or the airplane is usually the favorite, but if one could select a chosen few, comprising many of the kings of England along with their councilors, probably the achievement which would bulk largest in their eyes would be the collection of the income tax.

Starting with Edward III, who distinguished himself by collecting $130,000 by a graduated capital levy in 1321 without causing a revolution, the history of the efforts of the rulers of our race to yoke us with this burden is interesting. Edward III's levy was very modest, says A. G. D. in the Winnipeg Free Press. It ranged from $30 to 8 cents, according to the position of the taxpayer.

Richard II—his ill-starred grandson—almost lost his throne before he had got firmly seated on it, because he levied a still more modest tax, ranging from $5 to 8 cents. Wat Tyler, before he was murdered, so convinced the rulers of Britain that an income tax was not a practical form of taxation that it was more than 200 years before such a levy was again attempted.

Safe Makers Only One Jump Ahead of Thieves

Recent defensive experiments and inventions might lead us to forecast an end to bank burglary. But to bring this about in fact is not so easy, asserts the Scientific American. What concerns safe makers immediately is the possibility of devising some metal or other substance capable of resisting the devastating onslaught of the various types of the acetylene torch, a high temperature device which will eat its fiery way through metal defenses once thought absolutely impregnable.

The contest between the safe cracker and the safe maker is fast resolving itself into the old problem of the irresistible force and the immovable body—with the odds in favor of the safe cracker.

Since the beginning of safe making the inventors have had two sets of men to deal with—the burglars who use the drill and those who use explosives. Each new improvement of safes has been met, on the part of the burglar, with methods for successfully attacking it.

Marvelous Natural Bridge

The Rainbow natural bridge is located within the Navajo Indian reservation near the southern boundary of Utah, and spans a canyon and a small stream which drains the northwestern slope of the Navajo mountains. This bridge is unique in that it is not only a symmetrical arch below but presents also a curved surface above, thus roughly suggesting a rainbow. Its height above the surface of the water is 309 feet, and its span is 278 feet. The bridge and its neighboring canyon walls are gorgeously clothed in mottled red and yellow. The Indian story concerning its origin is that a rainbow was turned to stone, thus permitting certain hero gods to escape flood waters in the canyon. Devout Indians will not pass under this bridge without saying their prayers. The Indian name was Nagee-lid Nonne-zoshi—"The rainbow turned to stone."

Black Maria

Everybody knows that prison vans are called "Black Marias." The reason for that appellation is given in the following terms in the Star of November 28, 1874, in the form of a letter from a correspondent:

"About 1835 or 1840 there resided in New York city a lady of African descent and bacchanalian habits bearing the classical name of Maria. Her sprees were frequent and glorious. It came to pass that whenever she indulged she was always nabbed by the police. They invariably had to put her in a wagon to take her to the station house. This thing occuring so aften, the vehicle was called Black Maria's carriage. Therefrom the van used to convey prisoners came to be called the Black Maria."—Washington Star.

OUR WONDERFUL BODIES

Health Talk by Dr. Dill, the Chiropractor.

All Bible readers know that they are "fearfully and wonderfully made."

A marvelous doctor from Australia tells us that the bodily machine in which we live is even more marvelous than we know.

This Australian doctor referred to by prominent doctors in this country as "the greatest anatomist and physiologist," shows how diseases can be cured by careful manipulation of verves far remote from the seat of the disease.

Surgery has also found out that by injecting a local anasethetic at the SPINAL root of the nerve that reaches the stomach, all suffering can be eliminated in stomach operations.

Many new things are being learned, all of which will benefit mankind, and the science of Chiropractic stands in the forelight in investigating all new discoveries for the benefit of public health.
