THE PRINTER'S DEVIL

Wesey Barry, one of the most versatile young stars of the screen, is coming again in film form to delight and amuse us with his unusual humor and youthful antics in "The Printer's Devil," a Warner Brothers' classic of the screen, and the Lyceum Theatre announces that this feature will be shown Friday and Saturday of this week.

It is an original story written by Julien Josephson especially for Wesley Barry, and tells of the trials and tribulations experienced by the publisher, who is also the editor, proof reader, typesetter and what-not of a typical small-town newspaper.

Sidney Fletcher, robbed on the out skirts of Briggsville, is forced to stay in town for a day, and upon meeting Vivian Gates the pretty daughter of the town banker, he decides to stay.

To aid him in the suit for Vivian's hand, he buys the local newspaper, the Gazette, and writes a scathing editoral against the light and power company. As banker Gates is president of the company, this puts Sidney back a bit in his quest, and it seems as if Alec Sperry, his rival, will win the girl.

One night the bank is robbed and the next morning circumstances fasten suspicions on Sidney and he is arrested and put into jail, while Sperry looks on, not at all sorry.

But Brick, who has a strong liking for both Sidney and Vivian, has gone out to prove Sidney innocent and by a succession of many interesting and humorous senes, brings the real culprits to justice and reunites his friends.

Supporting Wesley Barry in the cast are Harry Myers, Katherine, McGuire, Louis King, George Pearce, Ray Cannon, Mary Halter and Harry Rottenberg. The picture was under the direction of William Beaudine.
