Public Health Nursing In Maryland

Organized public health nursing, under the direction of the State Department of Health, is now carried on in twenty-one of the twenty-three counties of the state, according to a statement issued today by Dr. John S. Fulton, Director of the State Department of Health. The total number of nurses engaged in the county work is forty-two, some of the counties having more than one nurse. All of the nurses are engaged in generalized nursing. The two counties that are still without nursing service are Queen Anne and St. Mary's.

The nursing service is financed in various ways. In view of the importance of the work done for mothers and children, and the large proportion of the time of the nurse that is spent in service of that character, the work of public health nurses during the last six months has been made possible in eleven of the counties by appropriations from the State Bureau of Child Hygiene, which have been added to sums raised in the counties themselves. These appropriations are made with the understanding that as the work develops and as its necessity is demonstrated the expense will gradually be assumed locally.

Child Health Conferences

During the three months ending March 31, health conferences for babies and children under school age were held under the direction of the Bureau of Child Hygiene in 28 towns, in 11 counties—Allegany, Anne Arundel, Caroline, Carroll, Cecil, Garrett, Harford, Kent, Talbot, Wicomico, and Worcester. The aim of these conferences is to show mothers how to keep their children well. In connection with them, 651 children under seven years of age were given a careful physical examination by the physicians in charge. No medical treatments were given at any of these conferences, but all children who needed such attention were referred to thir family physicians. Over half of the children needed dental care, and in a number of instances, follow-up dental clinics were arranged to meet this need by the local nurse.
