Poultry Notes

Items That Will Interest Our Readers On This Subject

From now throughout the growing period of the summer wonths every poultryman must be on the lookout for coccidosis. This is the term used to define a condition among growing chicks whereby they cease to grow properly losing weight rather than putting on weight.

Their shanks, beaks and skis bleach ou the yellow pigment rapidly they become listless and inactive, and if the condition is not corrected a heavy mortality is experienced.

What is the cause of this condition, fou ask? It is nothing more or less than a little coccidia or a minute organism, which is present in moderate amounts is all poultry, but which is especially injurious to growing birds when it becomes present in large numbers.

The intensive conditions os the average growing range is responsible for the multiplication of this organism to a point where it becomes sufficiently prevalest to cause heavy losses.

Coccidiosis is more commonly caused by brooding chicks on the same ground year after year. This should never be done. If it is necessary to cse the same piece of ground. the range houses or colony should be moved to a new spot asd the range itself should be thoroughly limed and much of the most badly affected ground plowed limed and reseeded.

If coccidiosis makes it appearance during the middle of the season. permanent and stringent measures are secessary to save the chicks. Planning ahead to avoid caccidiois is the best way to meet the trouble.

If one broods on new ground—ground that has been free from chickens or from poultry manure for two or three years—they rarely experience any trouble unless they make the practice of brooding too many chicks in one flock or too many chicks on a limited area.

Overcrowding makes insanitary conditions. filthy soil and dangerous range conditions. The organism causing coccidiosis is present in the faces of the chicks, and when the chicks are so plentiful on the land that the ground does not purify itself the danger period commences.

The Hemingway Produce Company filed suit in Federal court recently to recover $24.486 from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, for 3,000 cases of Chinese eggs which the Hemingway Company claims were stored too close to the engines of the steamship President Taft from Shanghai to San Francisco. The hesult was that most of them hatched out into chicks and the rest were spoiled. Food inspectors at Angel Island threw the spoiled eggs in the bay and held up the small chicks because there was no shipping order for them.

Mid-Month Crop Notes

Maryland and Delaware

The outstanding feature of farming conditions is the almost universal need of rain, according to reports made to the Baltimore Office of the United States Crop and Livestock Reporting Service, at the beginning of this week. Only one or two counties of Maryland haev had rain in anything like sufficient quantity, and none in Delaware.

Pastures are fair to good throughont the two states, and excellent where there have been recent rains. Stock has not been turned out generally as yet, although the movement "from barn to pasture" has begun.

Conditions have been excellent for spring plowing. Very few reports show plowing less than 50 per cent. completed, and 75 per cent. would be a fair average for Maryland. The reports from Delaware show a much slower start in spring work.

Good progress is shown in the planting of early crops, partucularly oats, potatoes and garden stuff. Seed beds show good progress for tobacco, tomatoes and sweet potatoes. Some corn for canning has been planted, as well as peas and cabbage.

Altogether, farm work is coming along rapidly, and only a few good rains are needed to give the season a good start.

FISH HATCHING AT CRUMPTON

Announcement Made That The Chester May Furnish Young Fish For Whole State

That Maryland's largest fish hatchery building may eventually be constructed at Crumpton, was the announcement made recently by Conservation Commissioner Swepson Earle. If Chester river is kept reasonably clear of nets, so that shad may not be interrupted during their spawning periods, Crumpton may become the headquarters for all the important operations surrounding the hatching of shad eggs.

While hatching operations have been conducted at Crumpton and Millington for several years under the directios of George W. Parks, State Fish Culturist, the greatest success has been achieved during the last twelve months. Due to the hatching of eggs taken last season, the Conservation Commission has been able to release not less than eight million small shad, all brought to life in hatching boxes at Crumpton.

It is now probable that a hatchery building may be constructed at Crumpton so that operations may be carried on in a large way. Commissioser Earle explained that hatching operations for the Potomac River were conducted under Federal Supervision, but that the State provided for this work in Chester River.

In pointing out that the shad season is considerably earlier than usual in Maryland this year Commissioner Earle estimated that the supply of shad in Chesapeake Bay has fallen off from 7,000,000 pounds to 2,000,000 in the last decade. These figures, it is said, are sufficient to justify the necessity for more extensive hatching operations.
