Federal-State Shipping Inspection

For the first time, Maryland strawberries from some of the principal shipping points in the State are moving to market under Federal-State shipping point inspection which has been inaugurated this year at Marion, Berlin and Pocomoke at the request of the Peninsula Produce Exchange, one of the large Eastern Shore distributors of the crop.

Federal-State shipping point inspection is a development of recent years that has grown in popularity thruout the country since its beginning several years ago. The inspection is applied to carlot shipments and provides the shipper with a certificate showing the character of the pack, the quality of the product and the condition of the car in which the shipment goes forward. This certificate is a guarantee to the shipper of the quality of the product and its condition at time of shipment and serves to protect his interests in the event of controversy over quality at destination and deterioration during transit. Shippers have likewise found it valuable in promoting sales as buyers generally recognize the inspection as an assurance of quality.

The shipping point inspection for strawberries will be established at three of the loading points for this crop in the state, covering production territories in Somerset and Worcester counties. These two counties are among the three principal strawberry producing counties in the State and together produce more than four million quarts annually. The inspection will not care for all the shipments from Marion, Pocomoke and Berlin, but will apply to a considerable percentage and may prove the forerunner of a more extensive service next season.

A similar shipping point inspection will be provided later in the year n the same counties for the early potato crop handled by the Peninsula Produce Exchange and other shippers who desire it.

Shipping point inspection was first tried in Maryland last year with peaches and apples loaded at Hancock, Easton and New Windsor. Both the shippers and the State Department of Markets, under which the inspection was inaugurated, were well pleased with results and were impressed with the value of the service.

SWAT THE FLY

Getting rid of one fly now means the potential loss of many millions by August. To verify this statement, the statistician looked up the records for fly families and this is what the books said:-

April (wintered over female)	1
May 1	120
May 28	7,200
June 20	432,000
July 10	25,920,000
July 29	1,555,200,000
August 18	93,312,000,000
Sept 10	5,596,720,000,000

These flies placed end on end would circle the world 880 times.

There was a man in our town,
And he was wondrous wise,
He covered up his garbage pails
To keep away the flies.
Here's another:-
Straight from the rubbish heap it comes,
It never washes it's feet,
And every single chance it gets,
It walks on what you eat.
