George Makes Good

The road to success is a long one, but some of us find a short cut to that goal. At least, such is the case of George Cranor of Kent and Queen Anne Counties.

Three years ago George was making hay and doing the chores on the farm of Mr. Carroll F. Leverage near Chestertown. The farm was his environment his home his all.

Then he went to work as "gasoline boy," for Curtis A. Goodwin, former Ford Dealer of Chestertown.

"About the greenest thing that could come off the farm," to quote Mr. P. M. Brooks. George soon "ripened" to his new work under the guiding hand of his employer. So enthusiastic was he in his new work, Mr. Goodwin gave him every chance to learn more about the business. George ran errands, pumped gas, learned the parts end of the business, and became generally known as the handy man.

Then came the change of Mr. Goodwin's business from Chestertown to Baltimore. George was given the opportunity to go along and did not hesitate for a second. Once in Baltimore, his first big chance to make good was given to him. He was put in complete charge of the "Parts Department."

Under the guiding hand of Mr. Goodwin, he worked away with an admirable vim, to make good. His courtesy with customers, his spirit of stick-to-itiveness seemed to write the word "success" before his eyes. He worked doggedly, determined, set, to make good.

At nights he attended school he took a business course. Mr. Goodwin was greatly pleased at George's efforts he was glad to see the spirit displayed in short, his keen interest in the business.

While Cranor was plugging away making good in the Parts Department Mr. Goodwin and his salesmanager were planning to teach him salesmanship. He was admitted to the sales meetings. Then came the tutoring in salesmanship. George, always anious to learn, was not long in mastering the art. He was given his chance on the sales force.

Here again he worked hard determined to succeed. After two months work he ran a noble race with the highest man in the establishment and tied him for honors in December

The road to success is a long one, but George Cranor has taken a short cut and is well on his way.

Memorial Window in Shrewsbury

The Memorial Window "Grace" was placed in Shrewsbury by Mrs. Robert Perry Commins in memory of her mother, Martha Medders Boyd, and was dedicated on Mother's day by the Rector during the afternoon service at the time when the lengthening shadows of the setting sun are most beautiful.

This historic church is gradually securing a collection or beautiful memorial windows, on one side of the nave is Faith and Hope, and the third will be Charity, while the other side is Grace and will be mercy and Truth.

These windows along with the present improvement of electric lights which are now being installed will lend great beauty to this quaint spot. With this modern improvement of electric lights, Shrewsbury will soon have evening services instead of afternoon service.

College Publicity Service

A most enjoyable affair was given Friday night, May 29, when the Philadelphia Chapter of the Washington College Alumni Association held a banquet at the Meridan Club of that city. 35 former students of the College were present and Dr. Mary C. Burchinal acted as toastmaster. The chief event of the occasion was an address by John H. Minnick, Ph. D., dean of the graduate school of education at the University of Pennsylvania. Dr. Minnick spoke on "The Opportunities of the Small College" and dwelt with great appreciation on the advantages accruing from the educational factilities of the smaller institutions of learning as compared with the student's work in a large university. The discussion going on among educators as to the relative advantages offered by large and small colleges was taken up by the speaker who gave the small school; such as Washington College; the better of the argument. President Paul E. Titsworth of Washington College then addressed the meeting on, "Our College and Our Faculty," setting forth the increased energy with which Washington is going forward and the higher class of instructors being drawn to the College in recent times. He was followed by Prof. Wm. R. Howell who stressed the general subject of what it means to be a graduate manager. Prof. Howell is graduate manager of athletics of Washington and spoke from his experience in directing the business management and athletic standards of a small college but a growing one.

The banqueters indulged in a song fest after the speeches and college songs, lead by Prof. A. Roy Woodland of the College faculty, were sung with great zest and enthusiasm. The meeting was one of the most inspiring ever held by local chapters of Washington alumni. The guests of honor were President Titsworth, Dr. and Mrs. John H. Minnick, Prof. Howell and Prof. Woodland.

A Sad Affair

Three children were burned to death Tuesday when the home of Freeborn Ellwanger, a farmer living four miles from Denton, was destroyed by fire. Mrs. Ellwanger was burned severly while trying to rescue the children. The children were: Brown, 6 years old; Elenor, 4, and Aubrey, 18 mons.

Mrs. Ellwanger had put the children to bed for their afternoon nap and was at work in the garden when she saw flames shooting from the room in which she had left them. Smoke and flames drove her back as she attempted to climb the stairway. She screamed for help but, by the time her husband, who had been at work in a field, arrived, in company with a farm hand, the fire had spread thruout the house.

Memorial Day Celebrated

Memorial Day, Which should never be allowed to be neglected as long as the nation lasts, was fittingly observed in Chestertown last Saturday. Long before he time set for the parade, crowds packed the town from the country and autos were lined up along all the throughfare. Led by Sheen's Caralry, which numbered nearly a hundred, the American Legion, consisting of veterons of the late war, gave a most impressive parade to the cemetery, where the wealth of spring was laid upon the sleeping places of those who died as a result of the late war. Following this impressive ceremony, Rev. Mr. Saunders, of Massey, delivered a most impressive address to the ex-soldiers. In the afternoon a baseball game was played between Kennedyville. and the Legion, which resulted in a 5 to 3 victory for Kennedyville. Altogether, the day was perhaps the most elaborate and most successful celebration of the day in the history of Chestertown.
