Line Receding

The bay shore line at Betterton is rapidly receding, especially in front of the pavillion and piers. At the vresent time the high water mark at this point is forty feet lower than it was twenty years ago, according to prominent citizens of the town. This is due to the protection of the wharves, pavillions, etc., which have acted as barries against the waves and, at the same time, have served to hold the sand washed in by the waves which beat in there the year around. This has gradually raised a natural shore line, which has accumnulated year after year.
