THE PHILOSOPHER

(By Grantland Rice)

He knows that life is full of odds
Which none can beat at every start;
He knows the game is full of breaks
Which form more a minor part.

He knows that life is full of jolts,
Where Fate must often run amuck;
That none can gather strength except
Through struggle, sorrow and hard luck.

He knows that shadows follow suns,
He knows that night must follow day,
He knows the only roads worth while
Have barriers that bar the way.

He knows that hurt and heartache leave
Red scars which blister up the soul,
All set, where no black storm may cloud
His vision of the final goal.

And so he moves along the way,
Through fog and shadow overspread,
Serene, untroubled, out the road
Which leads his, step by step, ahead.

THE COUNTRY NEWSPAPER

The country is the town's biggest publicity agent in which it is published, both at home and in other places. It is not only seen but is practically read by all the home town people, and at the same time many home town papers have a large outside ciculation which means that many outsiders see it. It is also regular in its appearance and as is well known, it is regularity and repetition which counts in publicity. The newspaper has always been a major factor in publicity. Its accuracy is always its object.

The first weekly newspaper made its appearance in 1622 when the Weekly News started in England, and in 1704 the first weekly newspaper was started in America. It was the Boston Newsletter. In 1759 Samuel Johnson wrote the Idler: "The man who first took advantage of the general curiosity that was excited by the siege of battle to betray readers of the news into th knowledge of the shop where the best puffs and powder were to be sold was undoubtedly a man with great sagacity and profound skill in the nature of men."

In 1774 thirty-one newspapers were in existance in America, and each one contained some advertising. It is interesting to note that among these was Benjamin Franklin's paper.
