LAST ARTICLE FROM DR. PERRY

DESCRIBES CAMEL RIDE IN EGYPT

Will Address Any Lodge, Club, Church Or School, On His Return That Desires To Have Him

This is the eighth and last article from Europe written by the Washington College field vice-president of Chestertown, Maryland. Upon his return he will give a summary of his views on European conditions in general. Writing from Marseilles, France, Dr. Perry says, "Before I leave the boat 'Cordillere' at Marseilles, August 16, we shall have migrated 10,000 miles. On arriving at Marseilles we take the sleeper to Paris for a week's stay there; then for home! I now write of an experience in Egypt though many others would be equally as interesting had I the time to describe them. But, for an American at least, a camel's ride is unique.

It was planned in this way; first, a fifteen mile ride, south of Cairo, along the west bank of the Nile to Memphis, the capital of ancient Egypt. There is not time to record what we did in that city except to state that we deserted our Chevrolet for a more popular mode of travel, the ever present camel. North and south along the edge of the Sahara Desert to the Great Pyramid, twelve miles away; that was our objective. Some of us were afraid it might prove an ordeal beyond reason and I must confess that, for a novice, it did look full of evil forebodings. A camel does not at first glance seem to be a graceful creature but if you know how you may stick. And we stuck. Some found the going better while the beasts were trotting or cantering but a camel does not like to accelerate. Walking is his habit. We needed the inevitable Nubian camel-boy with his prodding stick; boys who live in the desert and who meet no one but tourists; knowing nothing about such up-to-date institutions as schools. Their sole code of ethics is to talk to please the tourist. They have christened their camels such names as Missouri, Yankee Doodle, Moses, Cleopatra, et cetera. They run along by the side of their favorite animal over these twelve miles of sand, for fifty cents, and all the while talk anything to please you. Meanwhile the camel himself exercises a patience seldom seen before. They may complain when they kneel to unload but otherwise they utter not a sound.

We made the journey in two hours and a half and were physically none the worse. I believe we were willing to go farther and as for the camel, he has no end of endurance. Two drinks a week suffice him and any sort of fodder seems to satisfy his cast iron stomach. For lunch he relished our cast off watermelon rinds. As compared with the Palestine camel he lives on "Easy Street" for he loves the sand. Camels are everywhere in the Holy Land but their lot is a hard one in the stony fields. The camel boy loves gay decorations for his faithful steed while he himself carelessly wears but one garment, a black gown. So that the camel is caparisoned like unto a circus outfit; colored beads and equally highly colored saddles with an abundance of tassels.

Occasionally we stopped en route to make observations from the sand hills while our four cylinder animals improved the opportunity to resurrect from the archives of their hidden recesses that overworked grub. It was a long journey along that camel's neck and his jaws gladly reciprocated. When ready to continue the journey, the camel returned the cud to its inner abode. At the end of this epoch-making trip we found fourteen beautiful tents just to the west of the Great Pyramid. Here comfortable cots, Egyptian rugs, candles and in fact a full equipment for our convenience were furnished. Best of all we had a real ten course meal in a spacious and yet cozy mess tent. In the evening we looked to the east, across the Nile, and saw the many colored lights of Cairo but we were content to rest that night on the quiet sands while guards kept the vigil. The morning brot a new program.

This is the last of my letters before sailing for home. They have been written on the run and many scenes and experiences have not been mentioned. Upon my return to Chestertown I am ready, through the courtesy of Washington College of which institution I am an official, to address lodges, churches, clubs and schools, especially on the Eastern Shore of Maryland. For such service there will be no charge whatsoever save the assurance of a greater loyalty to the one college in our fair section of the great State of Maryland. Write me as follows: Albertus Perry, field vice-president, Washing- College, Chestertown, Maryland."

A CHAMPION YOU MAY KNOW ABOUT

By Grantland Rice

The leopard walks in chains of silk,
The tiger purrs upon the rug,
And calls out for its bowl of milk,
Responsive to the slightest tug.
The blaze that once lit eyes of flame
Is now dead ashes, soon to be
Wind-blown beyond the stirring game
That found him once untamed and free.
The crown of steel upon his head
Is now a coronet of gold,
With purple ribbons interspread,
And laces woven in its fold.
And somewhere from the vanished hosts,
With all their records kept on file,
The ancient and the knowing ghosts
Of Samson and Delilah smile.

HINTS TO TOURISTS

Stop! Look Before You Drink

Going on an Automobile trip? If you are, you will be interested in these suggestions from Mr. Abel Wolman, Chief of the Buriau of Sanitary Engineering, of the State Department of Health:

"In the midst of the vacation period and with the season of greatest typhoid fever sickness approaching, a word of warning to the tourist and camper may be helpful in combatting the unseen foe of health that so frequently lurks in springs and wells, even in those that produce a water refreshingly cool and of sparkling attractiveness.

In the State of Maryland a project is now in development to maintain markers for the guidance of tourists to water supplies that are reguiarly inspected, analyzed and found safe by the State Department of Health. This plan includes, in addition to public and camp water supplies, the possible marking of private supplies at as convenient intervals as may be found practicable.

It is the practice of the State Health Officialls to inspect the existing tourists camps and to suggest such sanitary improvements as may be necessary. This practice is resulting in an increasing number of safe camping grounds throughout the state, but until the above mentioned plan is placed in effect. much unnecessary risk may be avoided, if campers will use reasonable care in selecting their camp sites, or if tourists will take the precaution of using water only from a public supply, all of which in Maryland are under the constant supervision of State Health Authorities.

If at any time water must be obtained from a well or spring of unknown quality, the owner's claim that it is the best water in the country should not be given as great consideration as the nature of the surroundings and the protection furnished the supply. If there is a toilet, stable, chicken yard, or other source of contamination near the supply; or if it is not effectively protected against surface wash and pump drippings, the water is at least potentially dangerous and should not be used for domestic purposes until it has been boiled.

In general, if the tourist will bear in mind that typhoid and other intestinal bacterial diseases can be contracted only by getting the germ from another human body into their own—by swallowing it—and will avoid ill-kept locations for camping and doubtful water supplies for drinking and domestic uses, the chances of the pleasure of their trip later being destroyed by sickness can be reduced to a minimum."

COAL STRIKE ON

Facts About The Big Anthracite Suspension

The annual coal strike is on in this country. The following statistics will prove interesting:

Workers involved, 158,000.

Collieries affected, 272, serving 828 mines.

Companies involved, 135. of which 9 control 138 of the largest collieries.

Area affected, 10 counties in northeastern Pennsylvania, covering 500 square miles, practically the only commercial anthracite in the United States.

Maintenance men remaining on duty to preserve property, 8,000 to 10,000.

Loss in wages per day, $1,150,000.

Loss in daily production, 266,000 tons.

Cause of suspension: Expiration of two-year contract, August 31. 1925, and failure to reach new agreement.

Demands of union miners: Ten per cent increase in tonnage rates; $1 a day additional for day men; check-off; equalization of day rates; two-year contract, and other features.

Reply of operators: Would not consider demands, that increased cost of mining and suggested that differences be arbitrated.

Negotiations: Begun at Atlantic City July 9, and broken off by union, August 4.

Former strikes and suspensions: 1900, September 12 to October 29; 1902 May 12 to October 23; 1906, April 1 to May 7; 1909, no suspension during wage negotiations; 1920, "vacation strikes" for varying periods in September 1923, September 1 to September 19.

—Crops in Moryland and Delawore are in fair to good condition, while the pastures are only fair, according to the synopsis for the week ended September 1 by the United States Department of Agriculure, in cooperation with the Weather Bureau.
