TODAY marks the end of the Firemen's Carnival. It is the biggest event of its kind ever staged in Chestertown and has been profitable both for the local fire company and for the business interests of the town. The fire company deserves the whole hearted support of the community. Its members render service without pay and are often called out at night to fight fires. The management of the carnival is to be congratulated on the orderly manner in which it has been conducted and in the many attractions afforded. It has been an asset to the town and community, from both a business and pleasure standpoint.

MARRIAGES

Miss Marguerite E. Hackett, the attractive daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Hackett, of Chestertown and Mr. John P. Lynn, son of Mrs. Apsley, of Rock Hall, were married at Sacred Heart Rectory on Monday afternoon at 2 p. m., by Rev. Father Earner. Immediately following the ceremony which was witnessed by the immediate family, a dinner was served at the home of the bride's parents; after which the happy couple left by auto for a wedding trip to Philadelphia and elsewhere.

Miss Myrtle B. Joyner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John E. Joyner, of Rock Hall, and Mr. Lars Borden were married by the Rev. Thomas J. Sard at the parsonage in Chestertown at eight o'clock Thursday evening, September twenty-fourth, 1925. They are residing in Rock Hall.

She is survived by the following children: David B., Hyland P., Wm. H. Stewart, Jr. Misses Annie R. Stewart and Ethel Stewart. Funeral services were held on Monday evening at the home of her son at 7:30 p. m., conducted by the Rev. G. A. Hulbert, pastor of Brown Memorial Presbyterian Church, assisted by the Rev. Stewart, son of David S. and Mary Perry Stewart, in 1880 and went to live on the old Stewart home place at Port Penn, Del. A little later, she and her husband came to live at Whitehall, near Chestertown. This was originally the home of the Wroth family, but was purchased by Mr. David B. Stewart for his oldest son. Here they lived and reared their children.

In 1897 Mr. Stewart died, but Mrs. Stewart and her daughters remained in the old home until it was destroyed by fire in 1903 when they removed to Baltimore, where they have since resided.

Mrs. Stewart was a public spirited woman, interested in good works. While in Kent she was largely instrumental in the organization of the Presbyterian church at Worton, was president of the Chestertown W. C. T. U., and active in the work of the county organization.

She was a great reader, had a mind of remarkable keenness and until within a few years of her death kept well informed on all the topics of the day.

THE CARNIVAL A BIG SUCCESS

AFFAIR FOR BENEFIT OF FIRE COMPANY DRAWS IMMENSE CROWDS--PARADE SETS EPOCH IN TOWN'S HISTORY

The big carnival, which has been in progress in Chestertown for over a week, and which will end tonight, has been a success in every way. Financially, a splendid sum has been realized, as large crowds have been present every night, which have been liberal in their purchases and in the generosity with which they have "played" the various chance games which have been one of the biggest drawing cards of the affair.

Not only has the affair been successful in this regard, but it has also served as a human melting pot, into which have poured friends and acquaintances and fellow townsmen, all becoming just good fellows in this common meeting place to promote a real benefaction to the entire community. And, quick to take avantage of this, people have been brought closer together in their common ties, and much social benefit has been the result.

The carnival has been well conducted and could not, possibly, have been better managed in every particular. The order has been well observed, with no trouble whatever, while the weather has been such that nothing better could have been asked. Altogether, it seems that everything has been unanimous and in complete accord in order that the very best results obtainable would be the result.

Every night, beginning Friday night of last week, the bright lights of the carnival have blazed their silent invitation into the night, while to them have been drawn, as if by a magnet, irresistible in its influence, people from all the walks of life from all the surrounding counties and states.

The carnival has had many attractions. The old, well-known carousel has been here, its singular music sending out upon the night air the melodies so often hummed in quiet hours. The whip has been well patronized, with its whirling, inviting, nerve-racking means of enjoyment. "Beano" has been patronized, until it has become a national sport almost, while the other "games of chance" have all received their share of the patronage.

These various "games" have been conducted by our local people in a perfectly legitimate manner, yielding only a small profit for a good cause. The prizes given to the lucky ones have been useful or ornamental and have served some useful purpose in life. In the conduct of these games our people have been ably assisted by the college boys, who have added zest to the affair from beginning to end. Some of us hardly appreciate the college until something like this comes up. Then you will find them at the very forefront of everything for the good of the community.

A great many people do not realize, even now, the value of our Chestertown Volunteer Fire Company, but they are fast awakening to the fact. There is, perhaps, no more useful or more practical institution in existence than a local volunteer fire company. True it is, that when everything goes along well and we have no fires to fight and no danger in view, a fire company is useless. But what of the night in winter, when the dread fire alarm sends a chill of horror to the very heart? What of the time when the home is in danger? Then the red demon of flame, leaping from home to home, begins to clutch to its red breast the work of lifetimes of honest toil and hope almost dies in the heart, as sparks leaping hither and thither, catch first here and then there while the smoke which begins to mount toward heaven tells its mute story of a spreading and dangerous fire.

Then it is that the human voice is almost lifted to heaven for help. Then it is that these unpaid men of our town leap, unhestitatingly, to their thankless task. It is then that they risk limb and health, and almost life, in order that the homes of their fellows will not ascend toward heaven in the form of smoke. When these things threaten, and they are ever at hand, we then appreciate our volunteer firemen. We cannot do too much to give them efficient equipment, not only to fight successfully the ravages of the fires, but also that they may be, in a measure, protected themselves from the continuous menace of injury.

So let the carnival go on to the end of the date, and may tonight, Saturday, be the crowning one of the entire affair.

Eclipsing anything of the kind ever attempted in this county was the colossal parade on Tuesday night. The time of this event was set for six-thirty. Hardly, however, had the sun gone over the hills when a stream of cars from the neighboring communities began to pack Chestertown streets, and by the time set for the event, Chestertown had gathered more people within its confines than had ever been assembled here before in the history of the old town. It is impossible to correctly estimate even the enormity of the crowd. It packed High street three and four deep for four or five blocks on either side, while all over the town people lined the street in anticipation of what was to follow.

And the anxious people were not disappointed, either in the size of the parade or the calibre of the things which were presented. Under the supervision of Mr. William H. Elliott, and Mr. Fred S. Russell, two of our well-known citizens, this parade was easily one of the most enjoyable affairs ever staged in Chestertown.

Headed by Dr. G. Alan Jarman, on a magnificient horse, and accompanied by a body of ladies on horses, the parade started up town, making its way down High street to Water street; northward up Water street until Maple avenue was reached; then up Maple Avenue to Queen street; then down Queen to High street again. Then it proceeded westward.

Spring avenue was reached, then out Spring avenue to Washington avenue; then out Kent Circle, where it disbanded.

In the parade were Sheen's Cavalry, business men, bank officials, Town Commissioners, Washington College and High School students, Dover Band, Wilmington Municipal Band, College Band, Chestertown Band, Court House officials, and the following towns represented by their fire-fighting equipment: Middletown, Smyrna, Dover, Denton, Easton, Centreville, Millington, Chesapeake City, and Harrington.

Silver cups were awarded as follows: Easton as the best-equipped company; Chesapeake City for the best band and for the most uniformed men; and Harrington for coming the longest distance. The Chestertown Volunteer Fire Company was also in line, having fire-fighting apparatus some of which dated as far back as 1804, as well as the magnificient equipment which it now holds ready for almost any emergency. The judges were Messrs. William Medders, Howard Turner and Ellsworth Leary.

The parade was the most brilliant pageant ever held in Chestertown in the recollection of the writer, and from what we can hear, of the oldest citizen. Elaborate in its proportions, intensive in its interest, appropriate in its suggestiveness, and beautiful in its unique attraction, it marks an epoch in the pleasure and the activities of the town, reflecting credit both upon those who planned the affair and upon those who carried it to its completion.

We were not prepared for the tremendous pageant that began to unfold itself a few minutes after the parade began to wind down Main street. Like a colossal snake, on fire with ignited sulphur, which began to flare and flicker its reddish color into the night, the pageant began to unfold. Slow at first, but with increasing speed, it made its way. No one could look upon the spectacle without being touched by its beauty and also by the sacrifice these men were making for a good cause. The town never seemed to look better than when these fire companies from a dozen neighboring towns were showing the people the implements they used for their towns' safety. As they marched by, the town people, appreciating the import of the affair, gave them continued and generous applause. There seemed almost no end of the pageant as the sulphur lights blazed and flashed all along the line. As the parade stretched to the river, High street seemed one long line of flickering gold. It was a glorious sight, long to be remembered, not only for the stupendousness of the affair, but also for the benefit it will render to a worthy cause.

If the carnival in its entirety has been a success, then the parade was a triumph unparalleled in the history of the town. We will all remember the parade. Let us have another one equal to it some time in the future.
