GOOD WORK BY KENT SCHOOL CHILDREN

Historical Essays Bv Miss Lillian Ford, In Seventh Grade of Flatland School, Worthy of Particular Mention

It is always of particular interest to Kent people when its children do anything of note in the work and activities of life. The schools, of course, offer children their first great opportunity in life. Whether they take advantage of the opportunity that the people give them, in the form of taxes, to reach high mental heights, or whether they simply waste their time in vain endeavors to perform worthless tasks, it remains for them to decide. At any rate, every effort should be made to insist that they devote every bit of their energy, and exercise every iota of their mental equipment, to do good work in the schools.

Below we are printing two historical write-ups of discovers of the past written by Miss Lillian Ford, of near Chestertown, daughter of Mr. and Mrs Olie Ford. Miss Ford attends Flatland School, which is taught by Mrs. Annie Duyer Brown. These two sketches show considerably more than ordinary ability and are well worthy of publishing. They deal with two discoverers perhaps little known to the average person, as are a great majority of the discoverers of the past. They become lost in the turmoil and maelstrom of the ages that follow fast upon each other, crowding events one upon an other in confusing rapidity. But, how ever this may be, there is no disputing the influence that discoveries have upon the centuries. They push back mental and physical horizon, widen the scope of the activities of races and fling new ideals into the intellectual skies.

These two essays by Miss Ford follow:

FRANCISCO PIZARRO

Francisco Pizarro was a Spaniard of low birth, and he was so ignorant that never in all his life did he learn to read and write. His parents were poor. His mother deserted him when he was a child. He would have died if he had not been nursed by an old son.

When Pizarro was old enough he took a job as a swineherd, tending pigs. He became very rough. He heard of a boat that was going to the West Indies so he ran off from his master and went on the boat.

When he heard of the rich country called Peru he wanted to go and conquer it. It was said that Peru was called the richest country in the world.

So Pizarro with a few hundred men and horses set out for the rich land in the South. When they landed with their horses and fired their guns it scared the Peruvians and they began to run away from them. They found that the story of riches of Peru was all true.

The most famous tribe of the Indians were the Incas. The Indians were the only kind of people that lived there. There were no white people. They were wearing ornaments of gold and silver. They found out that Peru was thickly settled.

The King of Peru kept sending presents of gold, silver and precious stones to the Spainards. They too sent plenty of food for the Spainards. The Indians rasied great crops of corn and potatoes. They kept llamas for wool and kept Alpacas and other animals as beasts of burden.

They had so much gold that they made their common utensils such as cups and bowls of it. Even the kings chariat was made of gold while his palace was lined with gold and silver.

Pizarro said that he was going to kill the king of Peru. The King heard of this and he sent word by a special messenger to Pizarro if you will spare my life I will send you wagon loads of gold and silver ,and he was as good as his word. After a short while his presious stone commenced to come in by the wagon load. Pizarro's eyes burned at the great riches he had won.

To show the cruely of the Spainard to their enmies. Then after while he was put in cains and was ordered to be burned to death. So the King of Peru was mercilessly killed.

Then did Pizarro take possession of Peru. At last did he obtain glory and riches. His name is still remembered as the conquer of Peru.

MARCO POLO

When Marco Polo was a little boy he would go to the wharves when ships came in from foreign ports and ask the captains about the far eas and about the boat and water. The [illegible]n and sailors all thought him a most curious boy.

Marco Polo's uncles were travelers and when they went to Inda they took Marco with them . When they put their camels away for the night Marco would ask about their travels, what they seen, where they had been and many were the marvelous tales they told him. They traveled by ship and sometime they traveled camel back, and sometimes by horse and even by foot. Whenever anybody said anything about traveling Marco's eyes and ears were open to hear and see all.

When he went to school he loved Geography and he took lots of interest in it. All of the masters of that time considered him an excellent and brilliant scholar. When he went to school he was always making and drawing maps and writng stories.

When Marco Polo was seventeen years old he went to sea with his father and his uncles to Cathay as China was then called. They lived there for many years.

They made their way from the Black Sea to China. In that time China was nearly half of Asia. The people who ruled it were the Mongols. They journeyed across Asia to the court of the emperior where they lived for seventeen years. There Marco entered the service of the emperior of Cathay where he had to travel all through the eastern parts of Asia.

Marco was married in Peking China He and his wife had wanted to go home to Venice for a long time but the emperor did not want them to go. But after a while they all got off and went to Venice where they hadn't been seen for 24 years.

When they returned home they did not come empty handed. But when they ripped open the seams of their coats there fell out lots of diamonds emeralds, rubies and sapphies sach as none of their friends had never seen

When Marco returned home Venice and Genoa were at war. Marco was appointed to take command of a Venetian warship where he was taken prisoner in a naval battle and kept in prison for a year.

While he was in prison he wrote a book of his travels and what he had seen. In this book he told of the Chinese palace with its walls of gold and silver and the jeweled panels. He said the princes wore robes of silk with precious stones. In a few years Polo's books were widely read all over Europe. After the return of Marco Polo the people started trading with the Far East. The people would go long routes to the Far East to trade for the precious metals. Marco Polo's name will always be remembered in the History of America.

PUBLIC HEALTH
From the State Department of Health

Take No Chances With A Sore Throat

Outbreaks of diphtheria in different parts of the State since the opening of the schools in September, have focused attention on the importance of immunizing against diphtheria so that they may be protected against this dread disease.

Figures given out by Dr. R. H. Riley, Chief of the Bureau of Communicable Diseases of the State Department of Health, show that during the first six weeks after the schools were opened this Fall, 133 cases of diphtheria were reported in contrast with 98 cases during the corresponding period in 1924. "Diphtheria is one of the diseases in which we cannot afford to take any chances," said Dr. Riley. "The germs are spread from the throat and nasal discharges of a person who is ill with diphtheria, or who is a 'carrier' of diphtheria germs. 'Carriers' are persons who though not sick themselves carry the germs in their noses and throats, and transmit the disease when coughing or sneezing.

"When a suspicious case of sore throat, croup, or tonsilitis occurs, time should not be wasted on home remedies, but a doctor should be sent for at once, so that antitoxin may be administered without delay. Just as any up-to-date fire department keeps supplies of fire fighting materials at central depots, so the State Department of Health has supplies of diphtheria antitoxin at easily accessible centers throughout the State, and no home in the State is more than three or four hours distance from one of these supply depots. Before the use of antitoxin was discovered, the disease was fatal to one out of every two children stricken. Now prompt treatment with antitoxin, will nearly always save the life of the child,—but delay, even of a few hours is dangerous.

"In addition to giving antitoxin to the patient, the family physician, or if he cannot be reached, the local health officer, gives smaller doses —protective doses—to the persons who are nursing the patient, or who have come in contact with him. The smaller dose of antitoxin protects the person temporarily, only—that is for a period of from two to three weeks. After that, the immunity, as we call such protection, wears off.

"But we have a method of protecting or immunizing against diphtheria so that the immunization will last for a period of years. For this complete immunization a different substance is used—toxin-antitoxin—it is called. As practically all children under twelve are susceptible to diphtheria, it is no longer considered necessary to give the children a susceptibility test, but time is saved by going right ahead with the treatments. The immunization clinics that have been held in the schools in Baltimore City and in many of our county schools, have been based on this knowledge. Three treatments, given at intervals of a week apart are necessary to complete the treatment—with a test at the end of six months to see whether or not the treatments have been effective.

"It is better to protect the child against diphtheria than to let it run the risk of getting the disease. You are not only protecting him against the disease, the suffering and anxiety that come with it, but against the dangerous after-effects which usually follow the 'catching' diseases of early childhood—damage to eyes and ears, to the heart and to the kidneys.

"County Commissioners and County Boards of Education will be rendering untold service to their communities by providing the means which makes this protection of the children possible."
