POULTRY NOTES

PRODUCING SHOW BIRDS—EGG LAYING CONTESTS—POULTRY HOUSES IN WINTER OTHER NOTES OF INTEREST

This is the month when the "frost is on the pumpkin and the fodder is in the shock." The season when the autumn leaves come and nature puts forth her most beautiful dress. This month is when mother nature puts the beautiful color in all late fruits. The sunny days and the frosty nights have a tendency to paint all colors that one sees in the rainbow.

These same cold nights and sunny days are the conditions that bring forth those beautiful colors in the fowls. In about two weeks of October ones fowls seems to color up more beautiful than at any other season of the year. Feathers like fruit are only ripe once. When mother nature colors the feathers. To hold this beautiful soft color for the exhibition room, is the great trial of the good poultryman. To allow the old hens to get in the ran and then bleach in the sun is to spoil the beautiful colors that will win at the poultry show. The faded out fowl is not at all pretty.

The Egg Laying Contest year is gradually drawing to a close. In some cases, it is possible to pick out the winners of some of the competitions, and in others, the contest is very close and may not be decided until the very last day of the contest.

Already a few three-hundred egg hens are possibilities, while the number of birds which are passing the 200-egg mark by October 31, are great, representing probably 20% of all contest entries.

Like the finish of a horse race, the last month of an Egg Laying Contest is fought with many thrilling moments for those contestants who are fortunate enough to be in the lead.

In the care of poultry houses in winter it is necessary to keep the atmosphere sweet and clean and not spend so much time in keeping it warm. If it is warm enough to prevent the combs from freezing it may be considered better than when there is a surplus of moisture reeking on the walls. It would not be far wrong for poultry, properly cared for, to endure a temperature about the freezing point. At this point combs would not freeze. Everybodys Poultry Magazine.

Housing conditions are quite different in Michigan from those in Maryland. The winters are longer and more severe and snow stays on the ground houses are of the closed type. Now and then we find a poultryman with nerve enough to use a well ventilated open front type. Most of the houses are built with a combination or three quarters pitch roof. This may be because it is thought that the type is best adapted to the climate, but it is more likely due to the influence of the types used at the Agriculture College. The first houses constructed in 1906 07-08 for use in teaching poultry at the combination type. All the laying houses used on the plant at the present time are of the same type. I believe more generous openings could profitably be used if properly spaced and if partitions were used to prevent drafts.

It has been interesting to see the large number of farms in this section of the country that are specializing in poultry. In certain sections of Northern Ohio and parts of Michigan, White Leghorns are very popular where large farm flocks are kept. The Leghorn has many advantages where specialized egg production is the object. Leghorns fly high and are therefore difficult to control or yard; they are not much when used as table fowl but when it comes to their specialty of egg production they are hard to beat. They can be hatched later than almost any other breed and still have time to mature before the usual time for pullets to lay. Being hatched later, the chicks cost less for they come from less expensive eggs. They are usually hatched at a time when eggs hatch best and it is easier to brood. They require less feed to develop and less for maintenance after they have been matured. There is less trouble from broodiness while in the laying pen.

In the parts of Ohio and Michigan very little attention is given to back lot poultry keeping. This is very much of a contrast to conditions in the East, where such a large proportion of the residents of towns and cities maintain a small flock in the back yard. We are unable to find a satisfactory explanation of the different. It may be that price of eggs is the answer.

Up in Canada, the Government Record of Performance inspectors use the Standard of Perfection as a guide in culling the Record of Performance flocks. In the course of such use, they have come across a number of "holes" in our present Standard, and one or two of them seem big enough to drive a five ton truck through. The Ontario branch of the American Poultry Association has asked for rulings on a number of points wherein the present Standard seems to step upon its own toes. Many of these are minor points but the first question is decidedly interesting. They say, there is emphasized the importance of body structure as a part of typical shape. How is body shape to be valued? How many points belong to it? How heavily can judges cut for narrow backs, sloping hips, shallow bodies, etc." If we understand the point correctly, it is that a new element in judging poultry has been introduced in the present Standard without there having been any corresponding changes made in the table of "cuts," to allow for the introducton of this new element. Interesting, and another puzzle for the judges if case score card judging should come back, as so many people are advocating nowadays. The Ontario branch of the A. P. A. is like a few thousand others in being "most anxious to see the Standard eventually become a text book that can be quoted as unfailing authority."

Those who have no thought for the work of getting ready for winter should get busy at once. It is well not to put it off, for if you do the chances are that something will be overlooked or have to go undone for lack of time Getting ready for winter should engage the attention of every poultry keeper. There is much to do. Start in by culling out and keep only the most desrable and the best types.

REPUBLICANS TO HAVE FIGHT

MAKE PREPARATIONS FOR ALMOST DEATH STRUGGLE FOR CONTRAL OF PARTY IN PRIMARY NEXT YEAR

Certificates of candidacy of Anti-Weller Republicans for the offices of Governor, United States Senator and Attorney-General were filed in the office of the Secretary of State at Annapolis last week.

The candidates are: For Governor, Marion A. Humphreys, of Salisbury, business man, partner and political lieutenant of W. P. Jackson; For Senator, John Phillip Hill, Representative in Congress from the Third District; For Attorney-General, William F. Broening, former Mayor of Baltimore City. These certificates were filed after a conference of Anti-Weller Republicans held in Baltimore, and it is stated that the Major-Generals in the fight are Dr. Joseph I. France, Lowndes.

Politicians anticipate that the action of filing the papers is the beginning of one of the bitterest primary fights ever held in either party. The leaders of Anti-Weller faction have been extremely bitter in denunciation of the Senator. During the action of the Antis," he was peacefully sailing to Florida. It has been known for some time that the leaders of the Republican party against Weller have been working on a ticket but its announcement was not expected at such an early date, and it comes as a surprise to every one.

A complete state ticket is looked for in the near future, and it is expected that a candiate for Comptroller will be named from one of the southern counties and one for Clerk of the Court of Appeals will be picked from a county in Western part of the State.
