NEW SOURCE OF PROFIT

LOBLOLLY IS THE REAL KING OF WASTE—LAND CROPS ON EASTERN SHORE

The skeptical scientist who swore he wouldn't believe what he saw, simply because what he saw didn't agree with what he thought, passed out two centuries ago. He was a heap worse than the man from Missouri; for all that fellow from the mule state asked, was simply to be shown. "Seeing is believing," he said, and having seen, he was satisfied. Trouble is, all skeptics weren't scientists, so we still have the doubting Thomases. It was a wise old bird who first said that money talks, and we have yet to learn of a better means to convince the skeptic than those proofs which have "E. Pluribus Unum" stamped somewhere about them.

If loblolly pine on the Eastern Shore were something brand new, and some one came along with big tales of its value as a forest tree. and people everywhere planted it and found it was all a bogus, you couldn't blame a soul for laughing at the suggestion of tending it as a crop. Fact is, it's the oldest crop the Shore ever grew, and as long as man wants a house with four walls and a roof over them to live in, it will be one of the most valuable crops of the Shore. Loblolly pine pays, and the poorer the land, the more it will pay in proportion to other crops.

The fellow in Dorchester who bought up 100 acres of cut over pine land, removel every bit of standing timber except the few remaining pine trees, and sold the resulting cordwood at a total net profit, above price of land, for $450, while the whole hundred acres were seeding back to loblolly, was no slouch in doping out the value of a pine crop on otherwise waste land. That other fellow in Dorchester who planted up 20 acres of the poorest standy soil in the county to loblolly had learned something of the proper crops for proper soils, and he applied that knowledge to the everlasting benefit of his pocketbook. And that fellow in Worcester who paid $8,000 for an old farm of a few acres which had grown up to a young pine thicket, not a stick of which was then merchantable, nor an acre of land of which was tillable, had learned that seeing agrowing crop of pine now is realizing big money from a future sale of lumber.

Verily, loblolly pine is the universal crop for all farmers with wornout or idle land; it's only the blind skeptic who can't see dollar signs stamped at the base of every pinetree.

CHAMPIONSHIP CHECKERS

A championship series of Checker games will be alternately played in the near future, in the tonsorial parlors of Mr. Ralph Barnett, Chestertown, and in Smyrna, Del., between Mr. Joseph N.
