CHAUTAUQUA GUARANTORS MEET

The Guarantors of the Chestertown Chautauqua held a meeting Monday evening for the purpose of discussing the advisability of extending the Chautauqua session another night at which time Madam Schumann-Heink would sing. While the guarantors appreciated the value to the community of such a performance, they did not think that the Chautauqua lovers would be able to meet the increased price of $2000 for this performance.

POULTRY NOTES OF MUCH INTEREST.

A Visit to the "Great" Madison Square Poultry Show---Other Notes of Interest

Last week the editor of the "poultry column" in the Transcript paid a visit to the supposedly great Madison Square Garden Poultry Show, in New York City. With all due respect to the judgement of other people, whose "opinions" have made this yearly poultry exibition almost immortal, we came to the conclusion, after to careful survey of the vast array of birds of various breeds, that, there was a great amount of "balleyhoo" about the exhibition in New York, about in the almost everything else connected with the metropolis. Personally, we know something about the life and th self-opinionated views and the magnified outlook of almost everything which comes out of that great city. Once there was a time when the very name, New York, struck with awe upon our ears—about in the same proportion that it does a great many people now scattered all over the country. Many there are for the sacred word today stands for efficiently, genius, almost immortality. We, ourselves, stand with due respect in the presence of its greatness and of the things which make it known whereever humanity has made its impress upon the globe.

Its gigantic, towering buildings; its supreme and lofty temples of art and music and religion; its deafening, ceasless roar of traffic, bearing upon its crest humanity on its missions of labor and play; its wonderful hotels, models of convenience and geniality; its colossal system of tunnels, subways, great bridges spanning tremendous chasms and elevated trains, whose roar never ceases, its wonderful stores, where everything of use, for work or play, can be seen. All these things give New York a recognized place among the great centers of civilization. We freely and gladly admit this. We are proud to recognize it and to realize that this great little rocky stand, boroughed by human beings like rats until they now ive like the densely populated cities of China, is a part-if a very small part —of our glorious republic.

But, while we stand uncovered in the presence of New York's greatness, we are not blind to its faults or to what comes therefrom. Some of the most colossal frauds of all time are in New York. Some of the deliberate murders are committed there, perhaps to a much greater extent than elsewhere. Some of the great air castles come from New York, are exploited around the country, catch "suckers" by the thousands, and evaporate. In other words the words New York stand now, and have stood, for years, for both greatness and for fraud and for exaaggeration.

Our visit to the poultry show there last week brought this home to us quite forcibly. We went there expecting to find supreme birds, super birds, colossal birds. Instead we found ordinary birds, good birds, splendid birds, poor birds and very poor birds. They had numbers, not quality. in our opinion. The exhibition was worth the trip, but not worth half the value. If you are in need of a male or "balleyhoo" which has been spread are about to purchase a pen of breed-about it. It was worth seeing, but ers, remember, you will be away ahead not worth worshipping and falling in satisfaction if you have them in down into the dust for. The recent your own breeding houses by February Baltimore show was every bit as good. at the latest. Perhaps better. Go see for yourself sometime. Maybe you will like it better and see more than we did.

Don't let your early laying pullets get run down in the fall.

Don't try to get more than a fifty per cent production, but keep the birds in good healthy condition and feed enough to keep them laying steadily.

Pullets which come into production early have a teendency toward a production slump and a molt when the short days and cool weather hits them. It is very important to maintain their weight; and adding milk, wet mashes, or providing artifical lights at the proper time will help out in the difficulty.

Feed plenty of hard grain at night. In the morning, feed in proportion to the way in which the pullets are producing. Probably fifteen pounds for each hundred pullets is enough when they are producing fifty per cent or more and the weather is cold. One of the main poiints to remember is that if they eat more grain they eat less mash, and it is the mash that contains the animal protein and brings the eggs. However, too much mash will cause a temporary increase in egg yield, with a possible dangerous loss in body weight and later production.

A pint of cod-liver oil in every one hundred pounds of mash helps keep the birds in good health during the winter. Good health is one of the big assets to any of the poultry flock, and that is why the cod-liver oil is worth its trouble and cost."

In starting out in a small way with poultry, one cannot overlook the importance of a right beginning. Years may be wasted, discouragement may come, and failure will follow carelessness or the lack of attention to the quality of the birds themselves. So many times the poultry keeper starts with a group of birds, to find after the end of a year, that they do not measure up to the requirements which they should. Either they are too small they lack vigor or they have pronounced defects, which means a new start must be made, and a whole year is lost. In the beginning, it is important to get the right idea; and that idea is that the best is none too good. A few more dollars spent in buying high quality birds, chicks or eggs, from breeders of known reputation and from proven strains, is the best, and the cheapest money which one can possibly spend. The problem in the mind of the beginner then should be.

You can purchase a breeding male now for less money than you will be compelled to pay for the same bird in late winter or early spring. Same is true. of course, in urchase of mated breeding pens. No breeder can carry a bird over the winter and put the same price on him as would be his ing to good fowls, bred by recognized Mrs. J. C. Bowers and Mrs. Kate Ford, of Still Pond, visited Mr. and Mrs. George Rash several days last week.

Mr. J. Frank Skirven has accepted a position as salesman with the N-B-R Motor Co. dealers in Buick and Chevrolet motor cars.

ELKTON MAN ELECTROCUTED

Charles Heverin, age 27 years, employed as a lineman by the Northern Maryland Electric Company, was electrocuted about 5 o'clock Saturday evening while engaged, in company with several other linemen, in making repairs to the line on Delaware avenue Elkton.

Heverin was on top of a pole when he accidentally caught hold of a live wire and received the full charge of 1,600 volts. His companions noticed what had happened, but, due to the full current being on, they were powerless to render any assistance. His straps, attached to his belt, which was fastened around the pole, kept him from falling to the ground.

THE BIRDS SHOULD BE FED

With the hardest part of the winter at hand, especially for Bob Whites and other game birds, the State Game Department has sent broadcast an appeal to provide shelter and food for the feathered species.

Stacks of corn-shocks piled up in a field and left open at the bottom or piles of brush covered with straw in fence corners make excellent shelter for quail and other game birds during

THE DECLINING CRAB INDUSTR

Government Survey Shows That This Industry is Declining Fast.

Serious depletion in the number of crabs in the Chesapeake Bay, threatening the existence of an important industry, was disclosed in a special report of the Bureau of Fisheries, sent today by Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerence, to Governor Ritchie and to Gov. E. Lee Trinkle, of Virginia. Mr. Hoover urged the enactment of drastic conservation legislation by the two States, including a law reducing crab fishing by one-third.

A decline of fifty per cent. in the catch of crabs was emphasized by the report, which covered a survey of conditions in the crab fisheries of the Chesapeake Bay made during the entire year of 1925. The survey of the blue crab industry of the Chesapeake was made by the Bureau of Fisheries in cooperation with the Maryland Department of Conservation and the Virginia Fisheries Commission. Crisfield, Md., and Hampton, Va., were the centers of the investigation.

To meet the situation the report as sent to the Governors of Maryland and Virginia by Mr. Hoover recommends:

"That the taking of sponge crabs be prohibited at all times.

"That the taking of the buckram crab be prohibited at all times.

"That the peeler crab be designated as one having the new soft shell fully formed under the outer hard shell, which can easily be detected by the pink sign.

"That at least thirty per cent. reduction be effected in all forms of crab fishing.

"That provision be made for the collection of statistics and biological data continuously through future years in order that the effect of any new regulations may be known.

"That State fishing commissions be empowered to change regulations subject to approval of their respective Governors."

The survey disclosed that the total catch of crabs in Chesapeake Bay had decreased from about 50,300,000 pounds in 1915 to 24,800,000 pounds in 1924; that crabbing now extends to all portions of the bay; that the catch in Maryland waters is dependent on the stock in Virginia waters and vice-versa that the commercial catch takes about seventy-five per cent. of the adult crabs out of the water annually; that the practicability of rehabilitating supp by hatcheries has not been de strated; that the transfer of sp crabs to new areas for spawnin poses is not likely to be successfu that continued investigation is sary.
