NEW STORE NOW OPENING—ST. MICHAELS, MARYLAND

A SENSIBLE, modest man of remarkable power and influence, which he used only to get things done, arises as though from the dead and unfolds vital and important history of current times. The man is Col. Edward M. House, Woodrow Wilson's silent partner. The man whose importance, because of his friendship with our War President, was so great that in Europe and America he was known as "Wilson's other self"—a President without office. Through "The Intimate Papers of Colonel House" there will come into the limelight the ramifications that make politics so intricate and diplomacy so mysterious. You will see how this "man of mystery"—Colonel House—went to England, France and Germany early in 1914 and there, in the name of Woodrow Wilson, sought to stop the oncoming war.

COLONEL HOUSE unfolds how he supported Wilson for the nomination—how their incomparable friendship started and developed—how Wilson was kept from having a break with Murphy and Tammany Hall, which would probably have cost him the nomination. Here Bryan, Page, Baker, McAdoo, Burleson, Houston, Daniels and other prominent Democratic figures, as well as Sir Edward Gray, Clemenceau, Von Bernstorff, Lloyd George, the Kaiser and hosts of other figures in current history will pass in review, their importance—and unimportance—revealed. You will be taken behind the scenes and given the proof of so many events and of so many people that no man or woman, young or old, can afford to miss the opportunity to read this remarkable series of one of the greatest periods in our current history.
